FINEST INK SYSTEM EVER DEvised!

- NEW FOTO-FILL FILLER—Only one moving part. Makes filling easier.
- NEW VISIBLE INK SUPPLY—Special window lets you check ink level.
- NEW PLI-GLASS RESERVOIR—A Parker first. 30-year life expectancy.
- NEW WRITING MILEAGE—Holds more ink—for up to 25% more writing.
- NEW EXCLUSIVE INK FLOW GOVERNOR—Assures steady, no-skip line.
- NEW 5-LAYER INSULATION—Guards against temperature-caused leaking.
- NEW PLATHENIUM-TIPPED POINT—Gives magical writing smoothness.
- NEW SAFEGUARD AGAINST LEAKING—Exclusive sterling silver breather tube equalizes air pressures.

*USES SUPERCHROME INK! Only Parker "51" and "21" Pens can satisfactorily use this great new writing fluid that dries as you write. Superchrome is super-permanent, super-brilliant. Parker Pens can, of course, use any ink.

● Even the former "51" had nothing to equal this! The Aero-metric Ink System, exclusive in the New Parker "51", is a wholly new, scientific method of drawing in, storing, safeguarding and releasing ink. It assures the most satisfying pen performance ever known.

You fill this pen as easily as touching thumb to finger tips. The instant-starting Plathenum tip spins a line as smooth as a silken thread. And the ink flow is always uniform.

Read all the important benefits of the new Aero-metric Ink System. Then try the New "51" at your Parker dealer's.

“Their Pension Checks Come Regularly”

For more than 37 years, the working days and the future of Bell Telephone employees have been made more secure by a complete Benefit and Pension Plan. The Company pays the cost.

Long, long ago—before there was any thought of social security or of pensions by most companies—the Bell System Companies started a Benefit and Pension Plan for their employees.

The Plan is much more than a pension plan. It is a well-rounded, financially sound program to assist employees in meeting the emergencies of Sickness, Accident, Disability, and Death, as well as retirement.

It is designed to give help of different kinds and on different occasions when Bell System men and women—the younger as well as the older—may have need of it.

Plan Recently Improved—Important improvements have been made from time to time to meet changing conditions. Twice in the last four years the minimum pensions have been increased. Just last November the minimum pension was raised to $100 a month (including social security) at age 65 for employees with twenty years' service. Many employees get pensions of substantially more than $100 a month.

Benefits Public as Well as Employees—All of this is in the interest of the public as well as telephone employees. Because for you to have good service, the Telephone Company must have good people to give it to you.

This Benefit and Pension Plan is part of the Bell Telephone Companies' responsibility as good employers and good citizens in every community in which they operate.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

GREAT GLUT

Sirs:

Finished reading Ernest Havemann's "The Great Glut" (LIFE, Mar. 20). Cooked myself a mess of mashed potatoes for dinner. Couldn't eat 'em all, so tossed them into garbage can, figuring that Uncle Sam still had 50 million bushels on tap. Didn't feel guilty. Felt good. Wondered how I could help eat up the millions of surplus tons of wheat, corn, butter, prunes, eggs and turkeys. Began to feel bloated. Picked up the paper, read that every day 55,000 new people all over the world sit down to breakfast. Not enough food for all these people. Began to feel guilty.

KENDALL PAUL

Wright Field, Ohio

Sirs:

We have lived on a farm for 42 years. Even in the best years, I've never seen over $1,200. With four children, I have raised my family and sent them to college with an income of from $600 to $1,200. How did we do it? By cutting out nonessentials. By working 12 hours a day, and oftentimes I have sewed until midnight and got up at 5 o'clock the next morning. Now we are considered wealthy. We own 580 acres of land. There is a debt of $17,500 on it.

The real farmers in this vicinity do not own or buy government bonds. We used our money to fix over a house to live in in our old age.

Do people in cities want our land to degenerate as it did in Palestine? In our New England states? In Virginia and northern Wisconsin? There have been signs that another great drought is on the way. Then you people in cities will be glad of stored wheat and corn. One wonderful thing about a democracy is that we can try things awhile and if it doesn't work we try something else. True, it is expensive.

MRS. H. B. PAUL

Milton Junction, Wis.

Sirs:

You made a bad error in saying that "government stocks had mounted to 50 million tons of potatoes." This would be 1,650 million bushels, or four years' total crop. Probably you meant bushels. . . .

JOHN J. EDMUNDS

Bridgewater, Maine

● We meant bushels.—ED.

Sirs:

You state that the government has enough prunes to give every member of Congress a dish for breakfast from now till the year 3239. I hereby urge that this be done. I predict we will see a definite improvement in the principal ailments afflicting our legislative branch: billionitis, verbal diarrhea, dizziness, cold feet and weak knees.

SECRETARY ACHESON

Sirs:

Your critique of Secretary Acheson leaves much to be desired (Editorial: "The Secretary of State," LIFE, March 20). SPEAKING OF PICTURES . . .

LIFE's Leonard McCombe is picked as "news photographer of the year"

Every year the Encyclopaedia Britannica and the University of Missouri join forces to stage the country's most prestigious competition for press photographers. Last week the judges announced their unanimous choice as "news photographer of the year": 27-year-old Leonard McCombe of LIFE's staff.

McCombe was given the highest award on the basis of a 10-photograph cross section of his work during the past year. He also received first prize for the best feature photograph of the year and tied for first prize for color pictures, thus winning three of the six top prizes offered. "His portfolio showed him a sensitive observer, versatile, above all a craftsman of unsurpassed excellence," said one judge.

McCombe joined LIFE in 1946 after a stint as a war photographer. During the past year he did such varied essays as "Story of a Fighter" (Feb. 28), "Cuban Correspondent" (March 21), "Cowboy" (Aug. 22), "Mr. Maytag" (Dec. 19) and "The Drama of Mexico" (Jan. 30, 1950).

Reproduced on these and the following pages are nine of McCombe's prize pictures. As his contest winnings he will receive three full 24-volume sets of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

DANCER RAY BOLGER provided an exclusive shot (LIFE, March 21) by being knocked off his feet as he got in way of boxers performing at beer festival.

inspired hundreds of letters offering adoption. McCombe said finding dog was biggest thrill of the year.

UNDERWORLD CHIEFTAIN Frank Costello, who is seldom photographed, was one of McCombe's scoops (LIFE, March 28). "He gave me only a few minutes to take his picture and get out," McCombe says.

CORRESPONDENT IN CUBA, Henry Wallace, taking a siesta on porch of home in Havana, was subject of an essay (LIFE, March 21) on the life of a happy American expatriate. Wallace had quit his job in the States and found a way of luxuriating in tropics by working as a part-time reporter for U.S. periodicals.

TORTILLA MAKERS were photographed for essay "The Drama of Mexico." A street scene taken on the same trip was picked as best color shot of year.

COWBOY PORTRAIT, a close-up of C. H. Long's weather-beaten face, was used on the cover of LIFE.

"COWBOY" ESSAY HELPED HIM WIN

Three of McCombe's prize-winning photos were taken while doing an 11-page essay, "Cowboy," documenting the life of C. H. Long on the Texas Panhandle. It was while driving to the 320,000-acre JA ranch, of which Long is foreman, that McCombe saw Lucky alongside the road. The pictures above and at left ran as part of "Cowboy" essay but prize-winning photo at bottom was not published in the magazine. The reason: Cowboy Long was not in the picture.

DIAMOND AND WEDDING RINGS

Headress by WALTER FLORELL

WESTBURY SET, An Artcarved Centennial value in yellow gold. Engagement ring, $300. Also from $225 to $1250 with other size diamonds. Bride's circlet, $110. Groom's ring, $27.25. Prices incl. Fed. tax.

Your ring on her finger...

It says "always forever" in a very special way . . . that's why only the finest diamond ring is worthy of your choice. Whatever you pay, be guided by the name Artcarved inside the ring you buy.

For 100 years, J. R. Wood & Sons, the creator of Artcarved rings, has been honored in world diamond markets. Today, Artcarved diamonds—never before worn—are selected by experts to meet all four standards by which a diamond is valued . . . color, clarity, cut and carat weight.

Artcarved craftsmen cut each Artcarved diamond to perfection, then mount it in an Artcarved ring, hand-carved in precious metals for lifetime beauty. Because of this unique rough-diamond-to-ring control by America's oldest and largest ringmaker, an Artcarved ring at any price represents a truly exceptional value. Registered and guaranteed Artcarved diamond rings sell at nationally established prices from $75 to $5000, wedding rings from $8. Be sure to look for the name Artcarved, in the ring, on the tag.

100 YEARS AGO—the first ring made by J. R. Wood found its way onto the finger of a happy bride. Since 1850, this house has won an honored reputation—among diamond merchants, among jewelers, and among the countless brides who have worn rings known today by the famous name Artcarved.

TRAFFIC JAM piles up on the Autobahn as trucks bound for Berlin wait at U.S. check point until Russians open their gates (out of picture in foreground).

CREEPING CRISIS ON THE AUTOBAHN

by ENNO HOBGING

HELMSTEDT, GERMANY

Great tattered drapes of fog hung from the sky over the Autobahn. Beyond Brunswick in the British Zone, where the highway heads due east toward Berlin, we were approaching Helmstedt, the traffic control point on the British-Soviet Zone border.

At Helmstedt, Russian caprice reigns supreme. Any Soviet whim can stop an American driving from the U.S. Zone to the U.S. sector of Berlin or a German going to the German city of Berlin. For a year of blockade the Soviets kept the Helmstedt portal completely closed. During the last four weeks their "little blockade" has swung the narrow door unpredictably open or shut.

Just beyond the U.S. and British check points the Autobahn enters the woods. There, parked on the right-hand side, we saw the sign of the "little blockade": a long dark line of 35 tarpaulin-covered trucks and trailers. Tough truckers, grimy with diesel oil exhaust, slept in their cabs or waited nearby in grumbling groups.

Near the head of the traffic jam, a jerry-built barracks town spreads out among the pines. Here at the barrier itself lies "Kuschdorf," a drab but busy market square in the middle of nowhere. "Kuschdorf" is named in humorous honor of beefy, cigar-smoking Heinrich Kusch. In May 1949, when the big blockade was lifted, Kusch came to sell soda pop and snacks to the first interzonal travelers. Today he runs a prosperous roadside diner and is the potentate of this strange settlement at a slit in the Iron Curtain.

On a muddy side strip of the Autobahn the Express-Imbiss, with neon lights glaring above its small counter, sells hot dogs, coffee, lemonade and beer. Nearby, a Wechselstube (money exchange) announces on a slate blackboard: "Today's Rate: 640 East marks for 100 West marks." Out in front stands a gray trailer, with a black-and-white sign advertising its "Fernfahrer Kundendienst" (Truckers' Service). Here the drivers check in and place calls to announce their arrival in Berlin or the West.

Scores of listless, poorly clad figures waddled by us in the slush of the westbound Autobahn lane. A short, haggard man was begging for cigaret butts. "I fled from the uranium mines in Aue. My family is still in Saxony. I had to sell my winter coat in Magdeburg. Maybe I can get work in the coal mines in the Ruhr." His eyes looked up in a plea for comfort: "There'll be some truck through here going to the Ruhr, won't there?"

For hours not a truck had moved. The leading vehicles in the Berlin-bound line had long since been quickly, competently inspected by Western German customs officials and border police. At the head of the line waited a huge van from the Rhineland, carrying rayon yarn to a Berlin textile mill. Its sooty driver, in an oil-spattered mackinaw, leaned against the front fender. He pointed down the road to the green, wooden Soviet guard tower with the red flag, then to the long Eastern German customs sheds on the right. "The Volkspolizei has been out to lunch for two hours," he said sullenly. "Last week they played cards for almost an afternoon. What can you do?"

Over on the Eastern side there were suddenly some signs of activity. The blue-clad Volkspolizei and Soviet Zone customs personnel had apparently finished their leisurely lunch. In the trailer of the Fernfahrer Kundendienst the young blond manager was already busy on the typewriter. Two anxious truckers, turned back from the Soviet portal, were peering over his shoulder. "Just get that damn number right," said the stocky one. He held up his original bill of lading. Two numbers in the gross weight figure were slightly illegible, so the Volkspolizei had held him up. He and his companion were hardly gone before another trucker, clad in patched blue coveralls, came in. "It doesn't say on my papers what zone the steel pipes are from. You'd think they'd know the Ruhr was in the British Zone. Type me some new ones, will you?" After him came another. "They say they won't take a paper that has erasures on it," he growled. The typewriter clacked away again.

There was a moment's quiet in the trailer. The young man pointed to two stacks of Warenbegleitscheine (invoice forms). "These"—he held up one pile—"were valid until last week. Now only the others are accepted over there. That's only one of the tricks."

No Wonder Dayton Koolfoam is the Most Wanted Pillow in the World

It's the result of Dayton's New Research Discovery

One woman has told another . . . and the news has spread.

Today, Dayton Koolfoam is the most wanted pillow in the world!

Just feel it . . . and you'll know why.

Dayton Koolfoam is radically different from any other pillow. It's so much softer . . . so much smoother . . . so much more resilient. Its color is clear and clean.

That's because Koolfoam is a new discovery . . . the only material of its kind in the world . . . the result of Dayton research and patented processes.

So, it's no wonder stores are often sold out of genuine Dayton Koolfoam Pillows. But, please don't be half-satisfied with a substitute. For there is nothing—absolutely nothing like genuine Dayton Koolfoam.

Look for the name on the cover and the pillow . . . it's Dayton Koolfoam.

lin firm was on the line, inquiring about its shipment of cardboard. "No," answered the young man, "your driver hasn't been here yet. Probably waiting back in line. Call you as soon as he comes." The door burst open and two more truckers came in. "These damned papers—" cursed the first. "Hand them over," sighed the manager and got back to his typewriter.

I walked over to the Express-Imbiss for a cup of coffee. A few hitchhikers were inside warming themselves. Some truckers were sipping beer. Behind the counter, the bird-faced, rosy-cheeked clerk was mournful. "Truck traffic has gone down a third," he complained quietly. He nodded in the direction of the Soviet border. "I went over there last week to see how the competition—it's a Communist cooperative restaurant—was doing. They took all my money and then fined me 20 marks. I was in the clink until I could get someone to come over with the money."

Outside, the trucks started up again, blowing their black diesel exhaust across the Autobahn. They crawled forward a few feet. "About ten trucks an hour going through now," said a Western German cop at my side.

Day after day at "Kuschdorf" the pace of traffic rises and falls with the mood of the Soviet border police. Sometimes it is six trucks an hour, sometimes none, sometimes the "normal" rate of 10 to 12.

The cost of all this to the very sick West Berlin business world is only partly measurable in immediate cash losses and work delays. The "blockade of confidence" looms as a much greater danger. Western German firms hesitate to place orders with Berlin factories that cannot guarantee fixed delivery schedules. Western investments, which Berlin badly needs, look ever riskier. Without provoking an open crisis, the "little blockade" is again pressing the point that there is no real security for Berlin, no healthy future.

After an hour we finally got through the gates and drove on to Berlin. In Berlin the same evening I was talking with some hardheaded Berlin politicians. When Helmstedt and the off-and-on blockade came into the conversation, plain speech turned to plaintive sighs. "The world could understand the challenge of the big blockade," said a civic leader. "But who will get excited about a few trucks held up today, some more tomorrow, a crisis in Berlin that just creeps up on you? The Russians have learned subtler ways to do us in."

Sliced cheese kept uncovered 7 days in an Admiral Dual-Temp refrigerator. The cool, dewy atmosphere has kept it as moist and flavorsome as the day it was sliced.

This cheese was sliced from the same piece and kept uncovered for 7 days in an ordinary refrigerator. Exposed coils have drawn out the moisture and left it dry, hard, and discolored.

At last! A refrigerator that keeps food fresh without dish covers—and saves you several chores.

Yes, an Admiral Dual-Temp preserves foods as no ordinary refrigerator can do—with conveniences you never dreamed of.

It's a treasury for frozen food! The big, independently controlled, sub-zero freezer holds up to 84 pounds of food. It quick-freezes fruits, meats, vegetables, leftovers at 20° below zero.

A life-preserver for fresh foods! In the big moist-cold compartment you get an advanced new kind of refrigeration where there's no drying out. Cool dewy atmosphere keeps all foods fresh and crisp days longer.

Nothing's hidden under covers! Foods stay moist in uncovered dishes! Even cantaloupes are welcome. An ultra-violet Sterilamp purifies the air so each food flavor keeps to itself.

Nothing to dread! No defrosting to do! That time-taking nuisance has vanished for keeps. Cooling coils that create the wonderful, cool dewy atmosphere have been built right into the walls.

Full-length cold! There's no pushing, no crowding in a spacious Dual-Temp. You get 3 cubic feet more storage at no increase in cost. Sealed in tight by the new, exclusive Therma-Door, which can't warp or buckle.

For the biggest, best values always, see the Admiral Line.

Freckle-faced Aileen Wood is a talented member of the younger set which helps give Aiken's big week (pp. 95-99) a holiday air. Home on vacation from a Virginia private school, 17-year-old Aileen rode in the drag hunt and won three ribbons in the Aiken horse show. Since she learned to ride at the age of 5, Aileen and her mother have won enough ribbons to cover one side of a tack-room wall. But she isn't so crazy about horses that she neglects tennis, at which she is quite expert, or dancing, for which she always seems to have plenty of partners.

BRIDGES SAYS HE'D "SABOTAGE THE SUBVERSIVES"

McCARTHY IS SUSTAINED BY COUGH SYRUP, COFFEE

WHERRY STILL WANTS LOYALTY FILES UNLOCKED

A GRIM LOOK ON HIS SUNTANNED FACE, THE PRESIDENT PUTS THE FINGER ON SENATORIAL "SABOTEURS"

THE BATTLE OF LOYALTIES

On the lawn of the winter White House at Key West, President Truman staged a dramatic little matinee one day last week. To set the stage for it he served his guests, the White House correspondents, hot dogs and hamburgers and their choice of beer or lemonade. Harry Truman downed two glasses of the latter, then settled himself in a wicker chair to give a performance that equaled Franklin D. Roosevelt at his angry best. The President had just refused to turn Federal loyalty files over to the Senate Red hunters. Now, lecturing the newsmen on postwar foreign policy developments, he came to a fiery climax with a direct quote: "The greatest asset that the Kremlin has is the partisan attempt in the Senate to sabotage the bipartisan foreign policy of the United States." Then he named as chief saboteurs Senators Styles Bridges of New Hampshire, Kenneth S. Wherry of Nebraska and Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin. Certainly McCarthy had presented an inviting target for the President. At the time of the accusation he was on the Senate floor in Washington, panting his way through a four-hour speech in an effort to substantiate his charges that the State Department had scores of card-carrying Communists or Soviet sympathizers. It was possible that one of his wild blows might connect, on one or more of his gallery of victims. But so far, while recklessly disrupting government business, private lives and public faith at a critical time, Joe McCarthy indeed had done his best to sabotage what was left of the bipartisan American foreign policy.

ACCUSED by McCarthy and defended by Truman, Secretary Acheson's senior advisor, Philip Jessup (right), reviews Far Eastern policy with Senator Connally and Acheson.

ALARMED by proposal that FBI files be turned over to senators, Director J. Edgar Hoover, shown with Attorney General McGrath, says it would harm his agency's work.

JOE MCCARTHY'S POLITICAL DYNAMITE CAN BLOW UP IN EITHER PARTY'S FACE

Joe McCarthy's sensationalized case against the State Department was built on a rather casual foundation. Asked to give a Lincoln's Birthday speech on Communism, he had trotted out an assortment of shopworn stuff, much of it already investigated by the House Appropriations Committee. But as time went on and tips kept coming into his office, the senator ran across much more important matters, or thought he did. Unfortunately blundering Joe McCarthy was hardly the man to document and present them to a Senate subcommittee, and the headline-hunting approach was hardly the way to handle them anyway. His case against Judge Dorothy Kenyon of New York backfired when she entered a spirited and convincing defense. So did his attacks on Philip Jessup (left, above) and lesser lights; time after time McCarthy's "evidence" dissolved into hearsay or plain error. The truth was that he was unprepared and was unable even to make up his mind whether he was hunting 57 deep-dyed Reds or 205 cases of guilt-by-association.

At first Freshman Senator McCarthy had to do his ball-carrying alone. Although some Democrats held a nagging fear that he might just turn up something disastrous to the Administration, his Republican colleagues were afraid he might discredit the party before he ever got around to it. By last week, however, he had picked up some support in various quarters. Senator Taft, for example, came to the rescue of the "saboteurs" when he observed that the only way to get the Communists out of the government was to change the head of the government.

The Lattimore case was McCarthy's big test; he admitted that his whole campaign depended on it. He said he had witnesses to prove his charge that the Johns Hopkins professor and Far Eastern expert was "the top Russian espionage agent" in the country. He had not identified the witnesses but had pretty well described them as Louis F. Budenz, the reformed Communist editor, and Alexander Barmine, the refugee Soviet general. Hurrying home from a U.N. mission to Afghanistan, Lattimore said he would prove the charges, all right—he would prove them to be unmitigated lies. By now the proceedings had the nervous attention of both political parties. The mess that McCarthy had stirred up was about to give one of them an issue; the trouble was that the country might not be able to afford it.

DEFENDING self against charge that he is pro-Red, Haldore Hanson appears before committee.

GREETED by wife and son on his arrival from Ireland, Owen Lattimore prepares to answer his "base and miserable" accuser, sue him too.

McCARTHY AND THE PAST

LET AMERICANS TURN FROM BYGONE ERRORS TO THE VITAL PRESENT

McCARTHY AND ACHESON

A natural thing to have done on this page this week would have been to resume the editorial discussion of Secretary of State Dean Acheson which was started a couple of weeks ago. Normally we would do so, being under some obligation to complete such a discussion once it is initiated. We are not doing so this week for a simple and illuminating reason. Senator Joseph McCarthy's shotgun hunt for Communists in the State Department has so fouled the national atmosphere that any criticism of the Secretary of State would be widely and wrongly interpreted as a contribution to the McCarthy lynching bee. McCarthy, not Acheson, is the figure of the moment. In the adjoining columns we examine him and the past in which his charges are rooted.

RETURN OF A GHOST

When Britain recognized Eire as a free state, the so-called "Irish Question" disappeared from U.S. politics. We had thought it gone forever, but we were wrong. For, speaking on St. Patrick's Day, Mayor Bill O'Dwyer of New York City said of Ulster's Prime Minister, Sir Basil Brooke, that he would be one official who would not be welcome at New York's City Hall. Twelve days later a somewhat waggish House of Representatives voted 99 to 66 to withhold all European Recovery funds from Great Britain after June 30 if the partition of Ireland is to be continued. The "Irish Question" is indubitably back for a replay.

Mayor O'Dwyer spoke in a fit of pique after he had learned that a St. Patrick's Day parade had been banned in Ulster. The House of Representatives voted as it did without any serious belief that the vote would stand up (it was reversed later). It would be silly for us to bring up the heavy artillery to fire at Mayor O'Dwyer and 99 U.S. Congressmen for doing something in pique or frivolity. But we do feel like saying tut-tut.

Does this inclination make us a bunch of dirty Sassenachs? Heaven forbid. As a matter of fact, we love the Irish. We just don't want to see the Ulster question mixed up with U.S. politics. The U.S. had enough of that sort of bitter irrelevance in the late 19th and early 20th Centuries, when pro-English Americans were busy accusing Irish-Americans of being in favor of Rum, Romanism and Rebellion, and when pro-Irish Americans were countering by twisting the tail of the British lion in the middle of every U.S. election. Such tactics on both sides did much to degrade U.S. politics, and we should hate to repeat the experience.

Do you remember a movie called Mission to Moscow? It was only seven short years ago that a huge Hollywood concoction under that title was launched upon the American public with a great fanfare. The President of the United States himself (Franklin D. Roosevelt) was widely supposed to be a sponsor. An actor played the part of President Roosevelt in the movie, giving cheery support to the notion that Joe Stalin (even if he had to murder a great many people) was at heart a good fellow and that Soviet Communism either wasn't really Communism or would turn out to be, in any case, a nice and hearty bedfellow of Uncle Sam.

This movie was based on the official actions and reports of America's own Ambassador to Moscow, Joseph E. Davies. (Mission to Moscow had first appeared as an officially approved, best-selling book.)

Joe Davies was and is a mighty nice man. Further he is a very smart man—few smarter. Like Senator Joe McCarthy he was born and raised in Wisconsin. He made a fortune in the law; finally he married Marjorie Post Hutton, one of the very richest of women in this land of rich women. And he was one of many millionaires and new millionaires who, instead of going against Roosevelt in the New Deal and wartime years, played ball with him—in the interests, as they thought, of the country as well as of themselves.

And why, at this late date, do we bring up this movie and Joe Davies? It seems like so many ages ago, even if it is only seven years. We bring up Mission to Moscow because you have to go back in recent history, you have to remember things like that if you want to think with any sanity or clarity about the pro-Soviet bias of American Foreign Policy in the years between 1933 and 1947.

The tendency of the American government to yield too much to the pressure of Soviet Communism at home and abroad has been one of the great tragedies of human history, as LIFE has often pointed out. Why did it happen? How did it happen? Why? How? That is a truly painful question. And the honest answer to it is that no man living can give an adequate answer. At any rate no man has yet done so—and no newspaper, and no magazine, neither the voluminous New York Times, nor Senator Vandenberg, nor Senator Taft, nor General Marshall, nor Eleanor Roosevelt, nor anyone else. The true story is too big. It involves not only leading personalities; it involves the whole trend and thinking of our tragic times. It involves John L. Lewis, and Phil Murray, who knowingly used Communists to build up the C.I.O. No one has yet been able to tell this whole story. Take Robert Sherwood: his book, Roosevelt and Hopkins, has received the most flattering praise; he himself has been bedecked with medals and honors. His book is an honest book as far as it goes, but from beginning to end it totally fails to explain why the U.S. yielded so much so tragically to Soviet policy in so many ways.

Since the Democratic party was in power during this whole period, it is only fair and proper that the Democratic party should bear the main responsibility for the tragic mistakes of American policy in this period. Without the prestige of leading patriotic Democrats, the left-wingers in the Democratic party could never have led the country into its bitter mistakes.

It is only natural that Republicans should seek to exploit this historical weakness of the Democratic party. But we deplore partisan exploitation of this weakness at this time—an exploitation which has become excessive and evil. Specifically we deplore the wild and irresponsible behavior of Senator Joseph McCarthy. We deplore the aid and comfort which he has received from Senator Taft and some others.

Joe McCarthy can do just as much damage to American thinking today and tomorrow as Joe Davies may have done in the past. It was right to support Russia in war; it was wrong to try to whitewash Communism. Now, it is right to fight Communism; it is wrong, wicked, to smear people indiscriminately, most of whom are good Americans.

The danger of Communism is real. And we shall not cease to urge greater efforts in fighting Communism until it is licked. But there is a right way and a wrong way to fight Communism—or any other evil. It is wrong when millions of Americans lose their decent sense of judgment and are ready to believe any charge leveled against anybody regardless of proof. It is wrong when all officials of a vital arm of government—the State Department at the moment—are subjected to virulent and indiscriminate suspicion. It is wrong when the attention and energies of the nation are focused upon a necessary but secondary item, security, and are thereby diverted from the vital and primary item, which is foreign policy and what to do about it.

The past cannot be undone. We Americans desperately need to pull ourselves together to wage really effective political warfare against Soviet Communism—now.

The great majority of the American people, by their votes or otherwise, are involved with the mistakes of the past. These mistakes cannot be wiped out by finding a few scapegoats. There may still be some characters who need to be removed from public life—indeed, we have no doubt that there are. But many of those who need to be removed have been removed. Others are bound to follow.

But do you really want to do your part in stopping Soviet Communism? Then, what you can best do for America and for American principles is not to join in the McCarthy lynching bee. What you and all of us can better do for America is to demand more vigorous and more farsighted American policies and efforts in Europe and Asia.

That is the way you can help to redeem American error—maybe in part your error—of the past. That is the way you can be a true patriot, guaranteeing that American principles and not the Politburo will win in the decisive decade 1950-1960.

WIND RAISES ROOF

On the outskirts of Topeka, Kan. last week Russell McConkey held onto his hat and watched helplessly while a 50- to 80-mph wind ripped up the asbestos shingles on his new house. Some blew away

BIG PRE-ELECTION PARADE WAS STAGED SATURDAY BY 14 TRUCKLOADS OF STUDENTS WHO RODE THROUGH CITY FOR AN HOUR CHANTING, "WE WANT A FULL TERM"

LEVY DANCE is performed by high school students worried about possible loss of accreditation. They are singing, "We are the seniors of '72 if the levy don't go through."

AT A RALLY AT NORTHEAST HIGH SCHOOL A SPEAKER GETS AN ENTHUSIASTIC ANSWER TO THE QUESTION: "HOW MANY HERE ARE GOING TO VOTE FOR THE LEVY?"

ORDINARY CITIZENS GET

After voting down a tax levy three times in a row,

A few weeks ago spring came to Kansas City, Mo. and found it steaming like a pressure cooker. From the swank south to the industrial northern districts some 9,000 citizens were out pounding doors and haranguing anyone who had a vote. Schools roared with rallies by night and pupils paraded and handed out posters. A school election was coming up on March 28.

On the face of it the issue was simple. Kansas City, rich and fat from wheat and cattle and just about to celebrate a century of progress, was in the midst of an educational crisis. The school buildings were in fair shape and the teachers were paid near-average salaries. But there was not enough money for a full school year. If the citizens voted "yes" on a property tax levy that would cost them an extra 38¢ per $100 assessed property valuation, their children would have 40 weeks of school. If they voted "no" the school term, cut to 34 weeks this year, might grow even shorter. Besides, their schools were certain to be discredited in Missouri and neighboring states, and their children would have trouble getting into college.

If the levy passed, Kansas City's school tax would still be only $1.38 per hundred—75¢ less than the average of 25 biggest Missouri cities—and its low school budget would only increase from $10 to $12 million. But there were some gimmicks. The levy would have to get two thirds of the votes cast, a requirement of the state constitution. There was also opposition from some property owners who were sure to vote to protect their pocket-books. On the other hand there was the tendency of the average voter to pass up something as unexciting as a school election. These factors defeated the levy in every election for three times in a row, although until 1949 money had always been found to keep the schools open for 40 weeks.

But this year the public got into the act. A good many citizens had always fought for the levy. Fact-finding committees had been active since 1946 and the superintendent of schools, Dr. Harold Moore, had been circularizing parents and teachers since September. In October a letter from Stanford Saper, a local dry cleaner, appeared in the Kansas City Star pointing out that the budget for the coming centennial celebration had been announced as $650,000. "We are in danger of being blacklisted by the colleges . . ." he wrote, "and yet we have the nerve to plan a pageant of progress." A week later he helped form a Citizens' School Committee. By February the levy proponents represented 600 citizens' groups from the P.T.A. to the local association of chiropractors. They were coordinated in one committee and a block system of vote canvassing was set up.

On election day last week the voters were as well organized as any anthill. They had been exhorted by the Star, by the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches, by radio and television skits, by both political parties and by all the pro-levy organizations. When the polls opened they could be supplied with baby sitters or whisked to voting places in private cars. By 10 Tuesday night the returns were in. To the astonishment of many prophets it was a record school vote: the levy had passed in a breeze, 68,470 to 30,013.

RALLY WATCHERS at Northeast High were Jane Ellen Williams, 7½ months, and G. W. Davis, 63, the vice principal of the school, who taught Jane Ellen's grandmother.

NEAR THE HAMLET OF SAND, TEXAS A FARMER BATTLES HIS WAY AGAINST A BITING CLOUD OF SAND WHICH THE WIND IS BLOWING FROM NEARBY COTTON FIELDS

STUCK IN SAND, A WEST TEXAS TRUCK DRIVER SCOOPS IT AWAY TO FREE WHEELS

A DUST BOWL LOOK IN TEXAS

Worst wind since 1936 blows away Southwest fields

For double the biblical seven fat years farmers in the Southwest have been keeping their fingers crossed against a recurrence of the winds which finished carving out the dust bowl in 1936. Last week they got a terrible scare. The fierce wind, which was blowing everywhere from Texas to Kansas, stirring up choking clouds of dust, was the worst they had seen since then. It raged across cotton fields near Lamesa, Texas (opposite page), piling up sand against the fences and filling in the ditches. Though farmers got out their tractors and tried to save the topsoil with emergency plowing, there was not much they could do.

Cotton is the chief "money crop" in west Texas but its cultivation year after year has weakened the wind resistance of the sandy loam that it grows in. And now it would take at least two inches of rainfall to hold down the shifting soil, even temporarily. (The Lamesa area had had only .05 inch since January.) "If it doesn't rain," said one worried farm expert, "the land could walk away."

The students of the College of the City of New York have a rousing yell that goes like this: "Allagaroo garoo garah; Allagaroo garoo garah; Eeyah eeyah, sis boom bah; Team, Team, Team!" During most of the athletic year the yell means little. Almost any good Nebraska high school team can beat City at football, and no big-league scouts hang around City's bench looking for prime baseball material. But in the winter, when the basketball season is on, the Allagaroods are something more than noise.

In 31 years as City's basketball coach, Nat Holman, one of the game's greatest players, has won 383 games and lost only 132. This year, with four sophomores, his team started out erratically but wound up strong enough to get into the National Invitation Tournament. Nobody gave them much chance until after they met Kentucky, the favored team, walloped them 89-50 and caused a Kentucky legislator to propose that the state flag be set at half-mast. City beat Bradley in the final, then went on to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament and, in the final, again beat Bradley. It thus became the first team ever to win both the N.I.T. and N.C.A.A. in the same year.

The double victory had a special meaning for City. A free-tuition college, it has an earnest, hardworking student body of 34,000, all from New York City, who need good grades to get in, good grades to stay in. There are no athletic scholarships to lure high school stars. Coaches accept extra homework as a reasonable excuse for missing practice. Four of the players—Roth, Dambrot, Roman, Mager—helped pay their way through school by slinging hash at a resort hotel, where they practiced basketball between meals. Layne spent his summer in an automobile parts factory and Warner worked in a dress company stockroom. After their victory last week they all gathered happily with their trophies by the campus bust of Lincoln (above).

10 YEARS TO DEVELOP THIS SUPERLATIVE CHICKEN

PLANNED just for superior eating, it took more than ten years for this dream chicken to come true; ten years devoted to research, selection and development to produce a special type chicken that grows big and plump while still young and tender.

Here is chicken at its finest . . . specially fed for quality meat, specially raised to give springtime flavor every month in the year . . . available now at your grocery store or meat market.

To be sure you get tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken look for the

This, too, is important news: tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken is also available QUICK-FROZEN . . . eleven delicious pieces . . . cut up, ready-to-cook . . . comes in cellophane lined, color-package with recipes on back.

THIGHS AND DRUMSTICKS

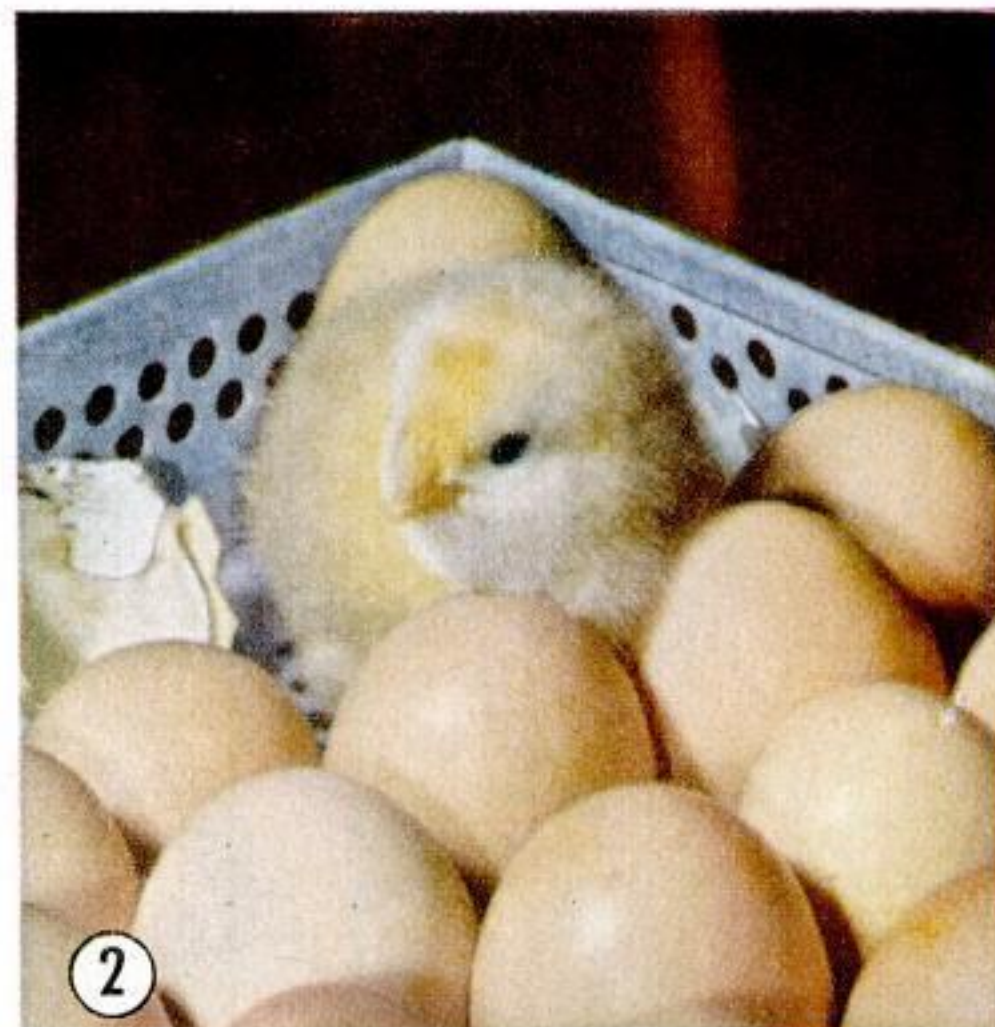

ICE CHILLED . . . FRESH

PLUMP MEATY BREAST

Premium

AT ONLY 12 WEEKS, this young, tender chicken, thanks to scientific breeding and care, is as big and plump as the ordinary chicken 16 weeks old. This bird starts with the natural tendency to grow big.

THOROUGHbred ARISTOCRAT—this fellow comes from parents of specially selected strains or special breeds of heavy meat producers. The instant he arrives he starts on his "career" of rapid development.

NO SCRATCHING for a meager living for these specially fed chickens. Confined to restricted activity in modern sanitary surroundings, they are fed a growth-developing, flavor promoting diet . . . resulting in more and better meat.

CHECKED AND DOUBLE-CHECKED by skilled workers using modern methods in ideal food-kitchen surroundings! After thorough cleaning, washing and inspection of each bird, supervisors select only the finest for market.

CHILLED FAST TO PRESERVE FRESHNESS, at temperatures just above freezing, immediately following inspection. Between layers of chipped ice, complete chilling is achieved within 2 hours to retain special fresh flavor.

YOU'VE NEVER TASTED chicken so good as tender-grown Swift's Premium Chicken. The proof is in the eating . . . and you'll agree it was well worth the years of scientific care and effort Swift took to produce it.

How to cement a friendship

There's no drink you can serve a friend that will be more highly appreciated than one made with Four Roses. Here are three reasons why:

1. Four Roses is a whiskey of the very finest flavor and quality.
2. Its reputation is equalled only by the most expensive brands — brands costing considerably more than Four Roses.

3. Four Roses not only outsells every other brand of whiskey at or above its price . . . but Four Roses also outsells most other whiskies at any price.

WORKING HARD AT BEING ALONE IN THE CROWD, DAVIS (CENTER) READS A BOOK WHILE HE AND FELLOW ARRIVALS AWAIT PROCESSING ABOARD S.S. "AMERICA"

WORLD CITIZEN DAVIS RETURNS

On March 30 a 28-year-old man wearing an old combat jacket arrived in New York from France and handed out an announcement which began, "A statement of Garry Davis, upon arrival to that part of the world community now known as the United States. . . ."

After two years Davis, who renounced his U.S. citizenship—he is the son of New York Bandleader Meyer Davis (p. 48)—to become a "world citizen" was coming back to "evaluate" his experiences. He had plenty to evaluate. He had staged repeated lie-down strikes in Paris, had recruited some 477,000 sympathizers for his vague but emotionally appealing crusade for peace. The crusade was aimed at abolishing war by abolishing individual nations, and although this was a tall order, ex-bomber-pilot Davis found many who wanted to go along. But, as he left France, he had come to realize that "the more I talk, the more I get things mixed up." Also Europeans were too "pessimistic"—Americans, he thought, might be different.

Reporters found him somewhat of a "character," but he still took their minds off chagrined fellow arrival Paulette Goddard, who had set them all up to champagne. Immigration officials also found him interesting and detained him "for interrogation" on Ellis Island. The State Department had recognized his citizenship renunciation, and he was a stateless man.

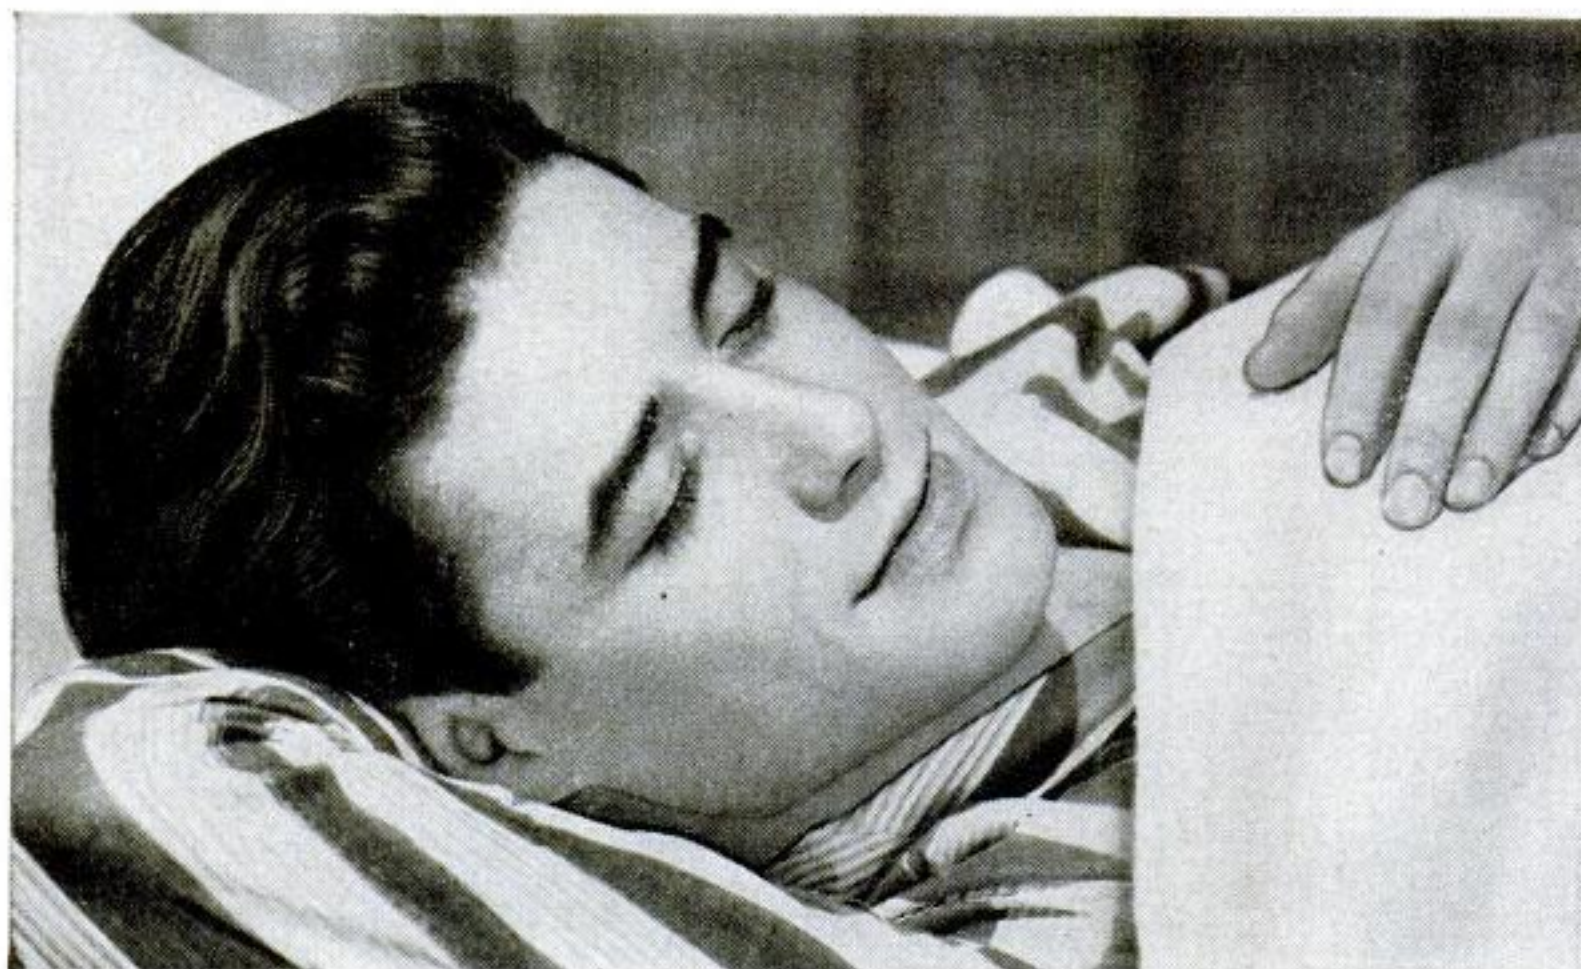

DAVIS GETS HIS FIRST VIEW OF "HOME"

He found the secret of SLEEP!

He can thank Phillips' ANTACID ACTION for this!

Acid indigestion was making his nights miserably sleepless... until he took Phillips' Milk of Magnesia before retiring. Then he slept like a log, because Phillips'—one of the fastest, most effective antacids known—quickly eased away the acidity that had kept him tumbling and tossing. Next time this condition keeps you awake, try Phillips'... and discover the secret of restful sleep.

...and starts his day IN THE PINK!

He can thank Phillips' LAXATIVE ACTION for this!

Constipation and acid indigestion often go hand in hand. Because Double-Action Phillips' is a marvelous laxative as well as an excellent antacid, it not only helps you slumber deeply the night before, but also brings gentle, effective constipation relief when morning comes. As a result, you start your day thoroughly refreshed, feeling "in the pink".

THE "HARD TYPES" DETAIN HIM

In France, where he has lived since he renounced U.S. citizenship in 1947, Garry Davis was regarded with a mixture of affection and bewilderment. He was arrested for staging lie-downs in public places at least eight times but was always speedily released. Parisians understood his craving for peace, no matter what they thought of his ideas for obtaining it and his fond acceptance of the limelight—he speaks of himself in the third person, has no objection to being jailed, likes to be called "the little man." A police agent who had arrested him "four—or was it five?" times, said, "Even while I arrested him I always appreciated him. He will not enjoy being arrested by the American gendarmes. They are hard types over there, with no comprehension. In Paris we are more sensitive." The hard types who examine immigrants in New York were not unfriendly to Davis, however, and since his French traveling papers were in order, it seemed likely that they would soon release him.

LATE AT NIGHT, after all of the 799 passengers have been cleared except Davis, a German lady (background) and a Polish man, he starts for Ellis Island.

Pillsbury's $50,000 No-Knead Water-Rising Twists

BAKE at 375° F. for 12 to 15 minutes. MAKES 2 dozen twists.

- Combine... ½ cup shortening
3 tablespoons sugar
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ cup scalded milk*
- Add..... 2 cakes compressed yeast, crumbled (or 2 packages dry granular yeast dissolved in ¼ cup lukewarm water); mix well.
- Blend in.... 1½ cups sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour and beat until smooth. Cover and let rest 15 min.
- Add..... 3 eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition.
- Blend in.... 1½ cups sifted Pillsbury's Best Enriched Flour and mix thoroughly. The dough will be quite soft.
- Let rise..... in one of two ways: (1.) Either set covered dough in warm place (80° to 90° F.) about ½ hour; (2.) or tie dough in a tea towel, allowing ample space for dough to rise. Then place in large mixing bowl and fill with water (75° to 80° F.). Let stand until dough rises to top of water, about 30 to 45 minutes. Remove from water. The dough will be soft and moist.
- Combine... ¾ cup chopped nuts (any kind)
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
- Divide..... dough into small pieces with a tablespoon. Roll each piece in sugar-nut mixture; stretch to about 8-inch length. Twist into desired shapes. Place on greased baking sheet. Let stand for 5 minutes.
- Bake..... in moderate oven (375° F.) for 12 to 15 minutes.

*If dry yeast is used, decrease milk to ¼ cup.

GRAND NATIONAL RECIPE AND BAKING CONTEST

Adapted for your use by Ann Pillsbury

At our Grand National "Bake-off" at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel last December, I realized all over again how strong the love for good baked foods still is in this country of ours.

You may want to add some touch of your own to these nine grand-prize-winning recipes (as women do, who bake with their hearts, as well as their hands). But I know that you will find these prize recipes every bit as interesting as I did . . . and that you'll want to try them out to surprise your family and friends.

I am happy to tell you that all of these nine winning recipes now are in every sack of our Pillsbury's Best Flour. Each one was especially submitted by the contestant for use with Pillsbury's Best Flour. We have arranged these recipes for you in an easy-to-follow, step-by-step form.

Good luck and good baking!

pot roasted with—

POT ROAST—Hunt Style

YOU'LL thank your lucky stars for the way Hunt's Tomato Sauce makes low-cost cuts of meat extra delicious!

It's Hunt's Kettle-simmered flavor that does the trick. All-tomato goodness—no starchy fillers! Costs just a few cents a can!

Choose the best buy in beef, according to your budget.

Get: 4 to 5 lbs. round, rump, chuck, or heel of round

Use a deep, heavy pan. Brown meat on all sides in:

1/4 cup drippings or shortening

Add: 2 medium onions, sliced
2 cans Hunt's Tomato Sauce
2 cups water 1 tsp. salt 8 cloves
1/4 tsp. pepper 1/4 tsp. ginger

Cover tightly. Simmer over low heat 3 to 3 1/2 hours or till tender. The liquid will be rich and savory, thanks to Hunt's Tomato Sauce.

Add: 6 to 8 potatoes, pared and halved
6 to 8 carrots, halved 1 tsp. salt

Cook 30 minutes longer till tender. Then—

Get ready for joy! Your delicious roast will serve 6 to 8 hungry people. And you'll decide to always keep Hunt's Tomato Sauce on hand—for stews, meat loaf, casseroles, spaghetti, leftovers.

Get Hunt's right away. Your grocer sells it for a few cents a can!

The inhabitants of Pasadena prove that they will buy almost anything if it's offered to them for less

The city of Pasadena, Calif. has been holding a semiannual rummage sale of castoff items for charity for the past 35 years, and by this time the sale's organizers are pretty well hardened to the American public's insatiable lust for anything, however useless, that looks like a bargain. But they were hardly prepared for the holocaust that overtook them this spring.

They had filled the block-long city auditorium with 50,000 items, collected from Pasadena's attics and closets and cellars. There were 2,000 pairs of shoes (5¢ to $1) and 300 men's suits (10¢ to $5). Radios that worked were offered for $1, ones that didn't for 20¢. There were camp chairs (35¢), umbrellas (15¢ to $1), two toilet seats (15¢ and 25¢), flowerpots (2¢), an Army blouse with sergeant's chevrons (15¢), a silver-plated hip flask (25¢), a papier-mâché bulldog made in Paris ($25).

At 9 a.m. the auditorium doors were opened to a crowd that had started lining up outside two hours before. By 9:15 there were more than 4,000 in the hall, grabbing wildly. One mother of 4-year-old twins, hastily snatching two pairs of cowboy boots (25¢ and 10¢) that wouldn't fit, exclaimed: "At that price, who cares? They can grow into them." In this spirit the crowd swept through the hall like locusts to produce the results shown on the next page.

Dr. and Mrs. Richard K. Conklin—"Rink" and "June" to their friends in Burlington, Vermont—are both college graduates and intend to send Carol Ann and Nancy June through college too. Dentists don't often get rich in New England towns, but Dr. Conklin knows exactly how his family's future financial needs are going to be met. A little book told him.

"HOW WE GOT THAT wonderful feeling of SECURITY"

SAYS DR. CONKLIN, "We thought we were providing for the future. But we had no definite, organized plan. Mutual Benefit Life's little book taught us the easiest, most certain way to build security. It showed us how to arrange our present savings, insurance and other assets, to provide much better for the future. Now we have a real plan, well within our means. We know just what we need, when we will need it—and how we'll get it."

The Conklins are one of thousands of families who have found a smoother road to security with the help of this booklet by J. K. Lasser and Sylvia Porter, famous authorities on family finances.

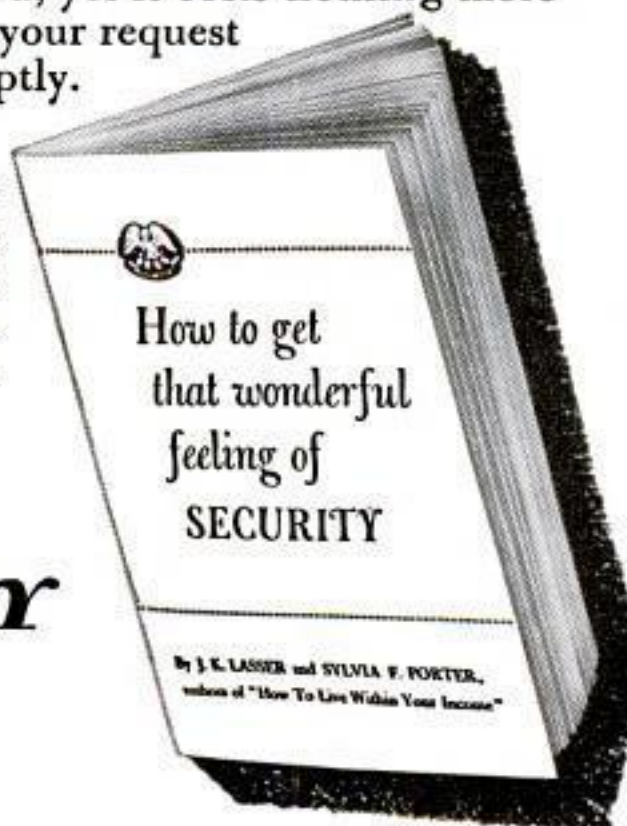

It is based on nation-wide studies, over many years, of family money-management—and shows you the way other families, much like your own, have successfully solved their problems of providing for future security.

This fund of actual experience can be worth hundreds of dollars to you, yet it costs nothing more than the 3c stamp on your request—if you send it promptly.

WHILE SECRET POLICE HUNT HER HUSBAND, MAGDA (PATRICIA NEWAY, CENTER) AND HER MOTHER-IN-LAW REFUSE TO TELL HE IS HIDING IN LOFT (CENTER, TOP)

THE CONSUL

Composer of "The Medium" writes
Broadway hit opera about a woman trapped by heartless bureaucracy

For the first time in Broadway history a full-length opera, unadorned by any jazzed-up show tunes, has become a smash hit. This new work is The Consul and was written by 38-year-old Gian-Carlo Menotti whose The Medium, though not a full-length work, was a surprise hit in 1947.

The Consul takes place "somewhere in Europe." A humble workman, John Sorel, and his wife Magda are fighting against sinister fascist influences. Hounded by secret police, John is forced to flee alone to a freer country. Then Magda begins her agonizing attempts, sitting day after day in a consul's office, to obtain a visa so she and her baby can join her husband. Like a nightmare victim, Magda is finally trapped by red tape and human indifference.

Menotti is one of few composers to write both libretto and music of his operas and also direct them. Though his music in The Consul is not unfailingly distinguished, it unfailingly packs an emotional wallop, especially when sung by Patricia Neway as Magda. Menotti's success has already encouraged the opera's producers to plan a U.S. lyric theater where similar works like Porgy and Bess, Street Scene and Carousel can be performed in repertory.

IN CONSUL'S ANTEROOM A MAGICIAN RELIEVES THE ANGUISH OF PEOPLE WAITING TO SEE THE CONSUL BY HYPNOTIZING THEM SO THEY IMAGINE THEY ARE DANCING

IN SHABBY APARTMENT Magda's mother-in-law (Marie Powers) sings lullaby to make dying baby smile. "Let the old ones watch your sleep. Only death will watch the old."

IN A FURY, after waiting endlessly, Magda tears up the senseless papers she was told to sign. In despair she finally learns that the consul is in league with the secret police.

AT A BALL. MEANWHILE HE DOES TRICKS FOR THE CONSUL'S SECRETARY

IN HER DYING DREAMS, as she commits suicide in gas-filled room, Magda (rear) joins her husband, his mother and the consulate people in a death dance.

Spring in the Desert

WILD FLOWERS HAVE THEIR BRIEF BUT GAUDY FLING

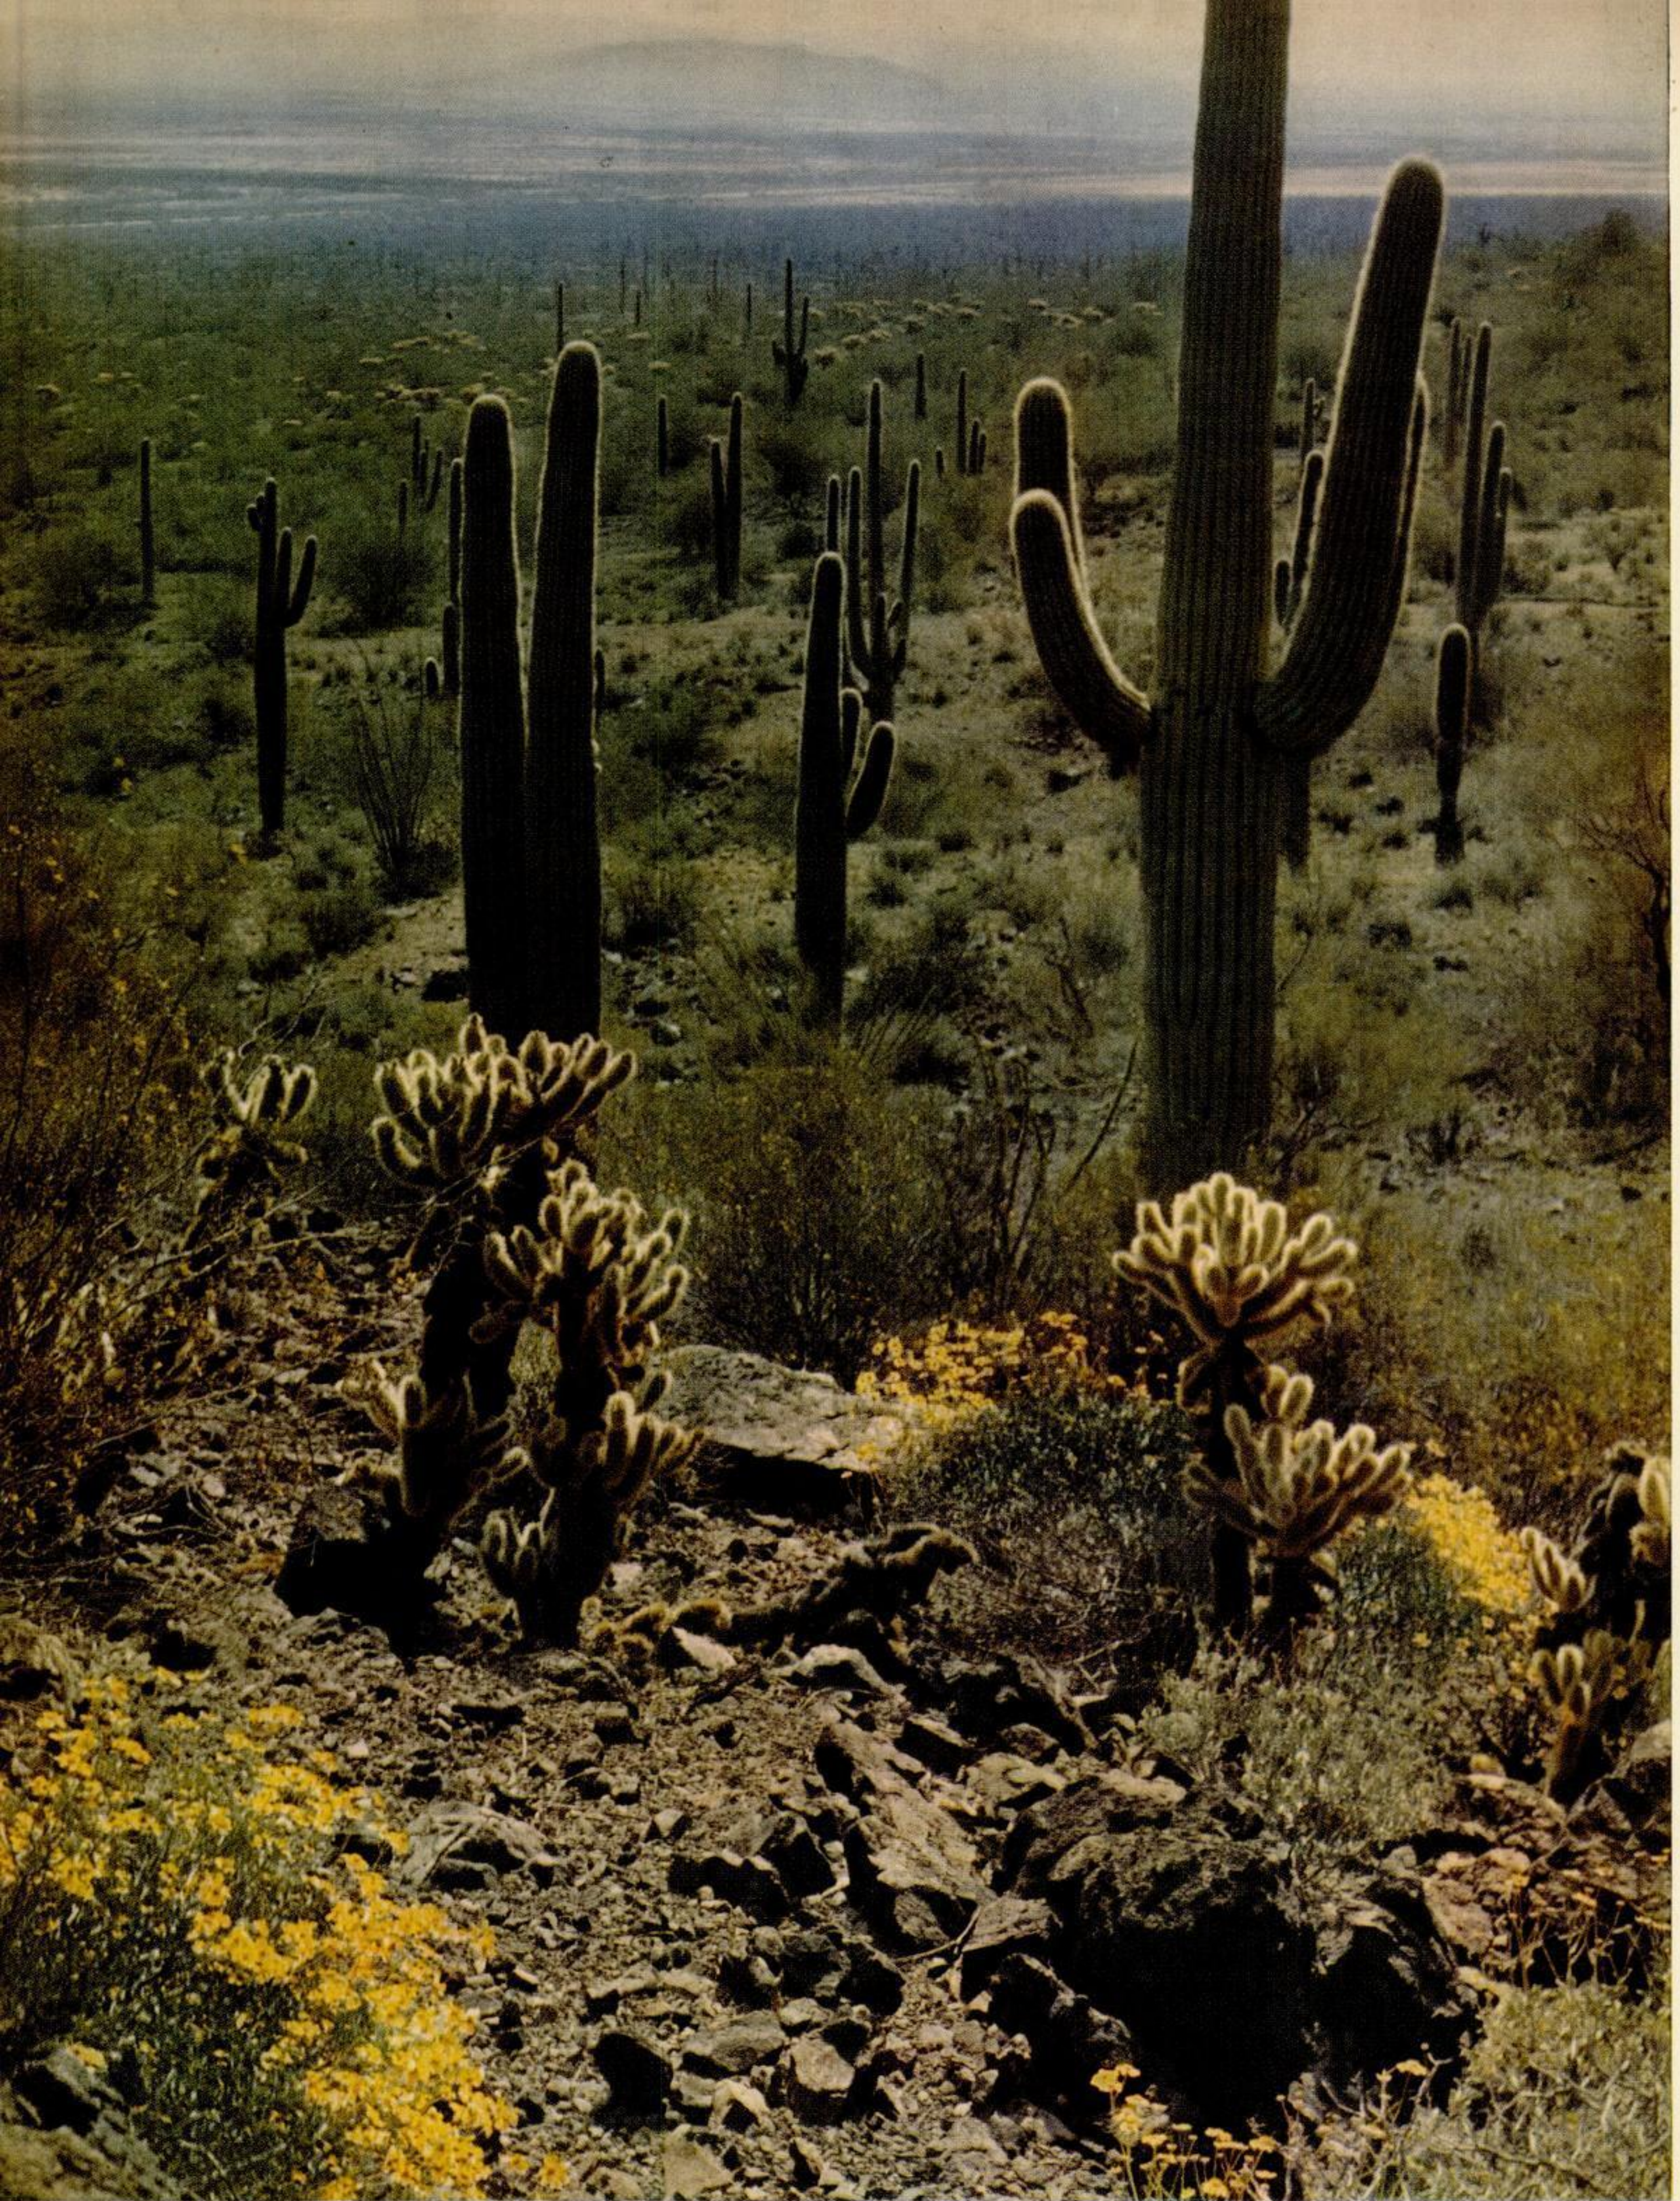

PHOTOGRAPHED FOR LIFE
BY ANDREAS FEININGER

To most of the land, spring comes softly and gives way in leisurely fashion to the fullness of summer. But in the deserts of the American Southwest spring comes suddenly, stays briefly and gives way quickly to summer's hot, harsh desolation. While it stays, however, spring is more spectacular and flamboyant in the desert than it is anywhere else.

In the short periods of March and April rainfall, wild flower seeds which have lain dormant in the desert for 11 months germinate, and the white primroses (above), lavender verbenas and orange poppies burst by the millions out of the finely sifted sand dunes. In the bright unfiltered light of the desert sun the display of colors is sometimes so intense and concentrated that it hurts the eyes. The brilliant season is short, for the flowers must bloom and seed quickly before the plants are shriveled and burned by the dry winds. After only a few days of life the flowers die abruptly and the desert, as if embarrassed by its springtime extravagance, returns to a sober mood for another year.

GIANT SAGUARO CACTUS towers above silver-tipped cholla cacti, low yellow encilias and a yellow-flowered creosote bush (left). Later the saguaro will bear white blossoms. Unlike wildflowers, the cacti are not governed in blooming time by the capricious desert rain because they have water stored in stems and trunks.

A DEVIL'S GARDEN is what Southwesterners call the little clumps of flowering plants that grow at the foot of desert hills, where water gushes out of canyons.

Here are the tall ocotillo, with flaming red clusters at the tip of their spiderlike stems, the pink-blossomed beaver-tail cacti (right, foreground), the yellow encilias.

A DISPLAY OF DESERT GRANDEUR is given by lavender verbena which carpet the floor of the Borrego desert in Southern California. The yellow flowers peeping out here and there are desert sunflowers. The tall green shrubs are creosote bushes whose name comes from the acrid odor they give off after a rain.

The verbena leaves are varnished and gummy, which enables plant to survive the heat longer than most other wildflowers. Some of them are pollinated by the wind, but generally the more brilliant ones are fertilized by the millions of desert insects. In the Borrego desert 143 different kinds of wildflowers bloom in the springtime.

ENGELMANN'S HEDGEHOG, found in the central part of Arizona, has vivid, waxy blossoms and an oval-shaped red fruit which is very sweet and tastes something like strawberries. The Pima Indians extract the oily seeds and grind them into a meal used to make flat cakes resembling the Mexicans' cornmeal tortillas.

BARREL CACTUS, which gets its name from its squat, round shape, has yellow flowers and 2-inch-long yellowish fruit. When all of the blossoms are open they form a bright circlet around the top of the barrelhead. The spongy interior of the barrel is cooked by the natives of the Southwest to make cactus candy.

CLARET CUP HEDGEHOG, which grows at a higher elevation than most other cacti, is found in southern and eastern Arizona. It is one of few cacti with blossoms that last more than two days. Its blooms, which are the color of claret wine on the inside, may survive as long as five days and five nights. Its purplish fruits are edible.

CORAL SNAKE is, like the desert itself, both beautiful and deadly. A relative of the cobra, it has venom which is so poisonous that it may cause death in a few minutes. But when the coral snake drapes its striped body across bleached cowbones under the bright sun, it is as colorful as the desert's flowers, and as lovely.

"Here comes the Bride"

She's Katherine Ellison. He's George J. Yundt, Jr. Both of Atlanta, Georgia. "Kappy's my dream-girl come true," says George. She's a peaches 'n' cream girl—so-o-o Woodbury lovely!

Beauty queen and queenly bride—that's Kappy. Admiring attendants arrange her soft, white veil...her soft, white skin has been cared for with mild Woodbury since Kappy's kindergarten days.

Bridesmaids beg for Kappy's bouquet. Flower-fresh skin like hers is theirs for the asking! She says, "I keep my skin soft the skin-smoothing Woodbury way!" Woodbury has a beauty-cream ingredient.

Partners on the Piedmont Driving Club court. "Woodbury 'n' me, in this case," laughs Kappy. "A girl's skin has to look smooth under the sun as well as the stars." Yes, Woodbury helps you score, girls.

Another Woodbury Deb Marries

"Wot'll it be," asks the little waiter at Aunt Fanny's Cabin. "Just more time to spend with the loveliest girl in the world," George counters. Kappy keeps her skin bewitching with Woodbury.

"M-m-m looks good!" says Kappy. "M-m-m looks better," answers George. And with all that Woodbury de-e-licious sweetness beside him—he doesn't mean food.

No "Skin-Burn" with Extra-Mild Woodbury

"My facial cocktail—to tone up skin," says Kappy. "First, a lather massage—then, rinse warm, rinse cold. Skin'ssatiny!"

Now! Woodbury comes in two sizes! Bath-size and facial! Big new Woodbury's bath-perfection.

"Take bath-size Woodbury to the tub. Woodbury's skin-smoothing beauty lather means no 'skin-burn'."

Thrifty Dynasurge washing uses less soap, less water—yet brings everything out sparkling clean and sweet!

What wonderful washing results the new Bendix gives you!

Gentle Bendix tumble-action has been improved by the Dynasurge cylinder. Now thousands of jets of hot sudsy water rain on every load—penetrate every fold and fiber—chase every bit of dirt out, as the cylinder revolves.

And never was a washer so economical! Both the new Bendix Gyramatic and DeLuxe feature the exclusive "Water Rationer"—the "eye" that meters your hot water to the size of the load. You use less soap—you save every time you do a wash!

New, greater washers at new low prices—now at your Bendix dealer's. Come in and see the only automatic washers with a background of nearly 2,000,000 owners, and a 13-year record of trouble-free service. The new Bendix Gyramatic and the new Bendix DeLuxe are the finest washers Bendix ever made.

BE SURE OF 4 THINGS BEFORE YOU BUY YOUR AUTOMATIC WASHER!

1. The finest washing results. The new "Dynasurge" cylinder in the Bendix Gyramatic and De Luxe washers takes care of that. Clothes are washed, triple-rinsed and damp-dried automatically.

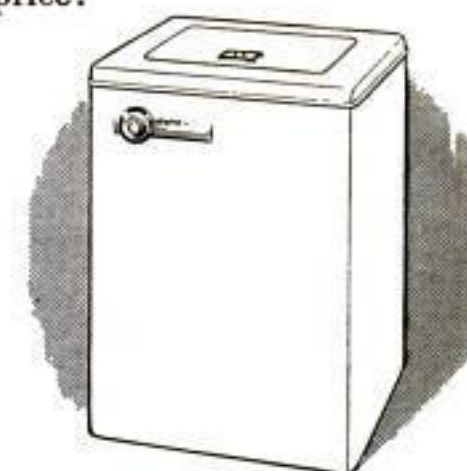

2. Soap and water economy. Unlike ordinary washers which must submerge the clothes, Bendix "Tumble-Action" dunks the clothes, hundreds of times in and out of a small amount of soap and water. And the new Bendix "Water Rationer" makes it even more economical than before.

3. Trouble-free performance. The Bendix was the first automatic washer of all. It's the only one backed by a 13 year record of trouble-free service. With nearly 2,000,000 owners it's the most-wanted washer in the world.

4. Low price. The new low prices on Bendix washers... as much as $50 under other makes... are made possible only by experience and mass production know-how. There are no finer washers at any price!

5. SENSATIONAL NEW BENDIX ECONOMAT! ONLY $189.95! It's the world's fastest-selling automatic washer... the first one every family can afford. Its secret is the amazing, flexible Wondertub which makes possible wonderful washing results without costly, complicated parts. No wringer. No spinner. No bolting in place.

THIRSTY DOLL sucks milk through a straw after its stomach is first compressed to create suction. Doll also drinks, wets and blows soap bubbles from a pipe.

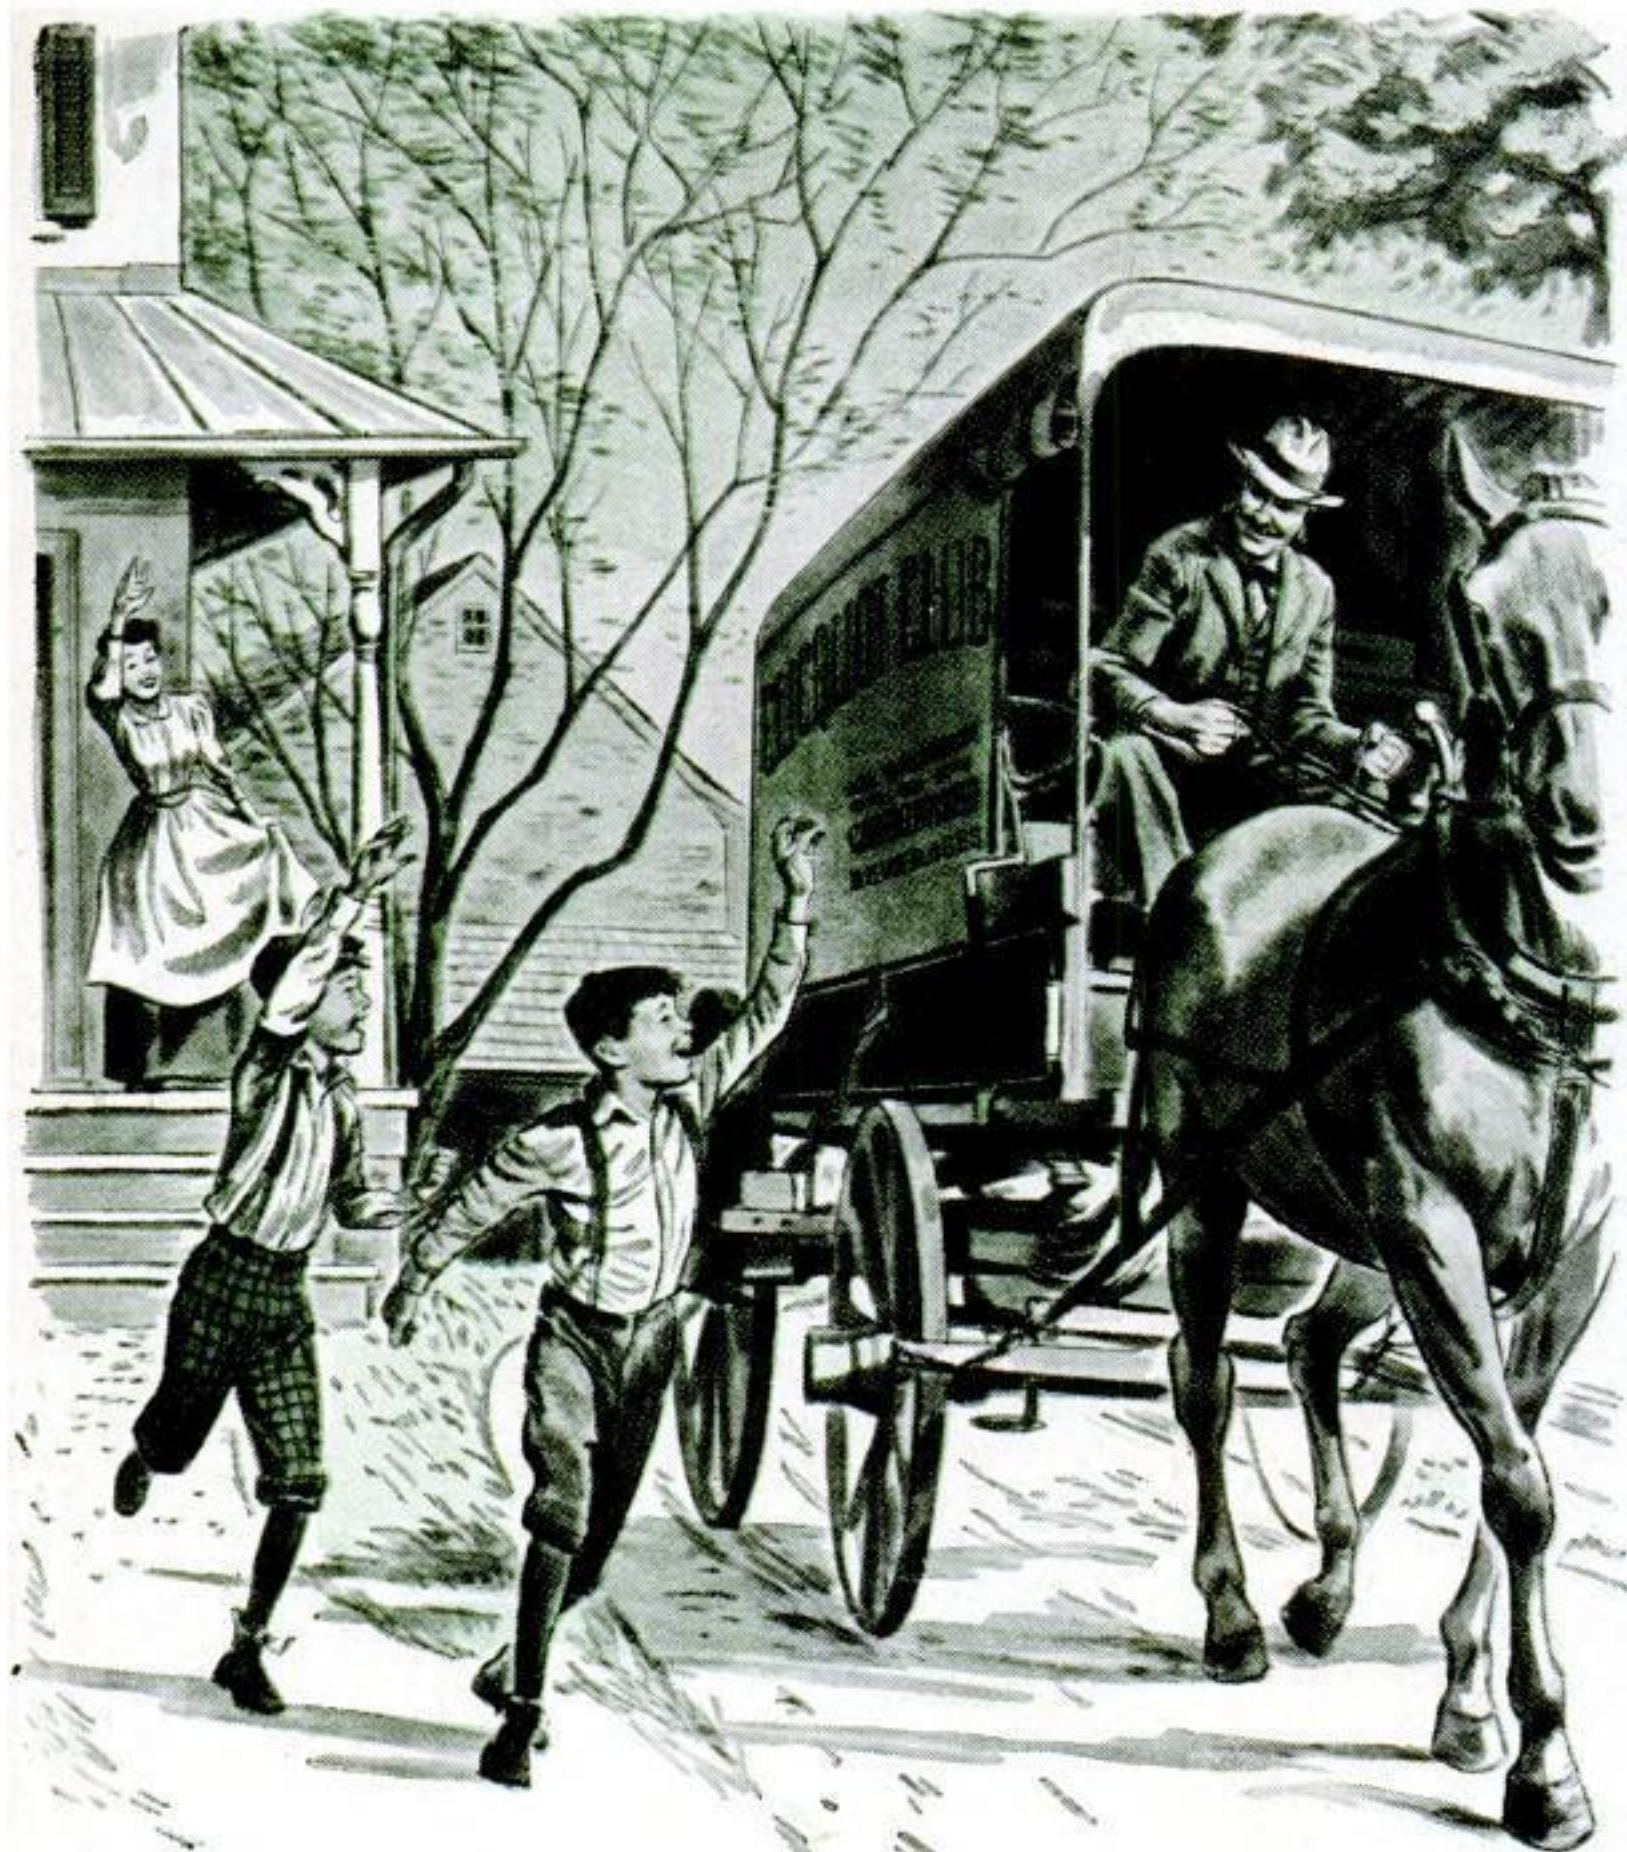

CHRISTMAS PREVIEW

Toy makers offer heart-beat dolls and atomic energy

Last month groups of hard-headed businessmen gathered solemnly in New York to weigh the merits of dolls that suck liquids against dolls with detectable heart beats. This was the 47th annual toy fair and 11,000 buyers (a record) jammed in to preview what they could order for next Christmas. They found some prices slightly down, manufacturing ingenuity sharply up. As usual the increasingly realistic doll had been carried to new extremes of human verisimilitude. Hopalong Cassidy's influence had reached roller skates (they have spurs) and bicycles (six-gun holsters attached). Most exciting of all was probably A. C. Gilbert's Atomic Energy Lab which at $42.50 includes a genuine Geiger counter, spinthariscopes and Wilson cloud chamber (next page) and promises the Saturday-movie-matinee set 146 experiments in real atomic energy. By fair's end it appeared this year would top last year's record $300 million in toy purchases, a happy omen for 7 a.m., Dec. 25, 1950.

EMOTIONAL DOLL has flexible skin, permitting change of expression and a cry ranging from whimper to scream. It also has scientifically accurate heart beat (120 a minute).

1893—when one delivery wagon supplied Clicquot Club to the folks who lived near Millis, Mass.

They listened for hoofbeats on the Dedham road

The youngsters who waited eagerly for the Clicquot Club sales-wagon back in the early nineties are grandparents today. They have seen how this famous flavor...so deliciously new in their youth...has spread all over America. First in old New England...then across the nation and both great oceans to the Old World and the Orient. The rich, ripe, mellow goodness of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale today as yesterday touches the top of taste perfection because it is flavor-aged. Its gay, sparkling bubbles last longer because of ice-cold carbonation.

BUT IT CAN'T MAKE ATOM BOMBS

GEIGER COUNTER with earphones in the Atomic Energy Lab is sensitive enough to detect the radioactivity of a watch dial's luminous paint. Nuclear models and samples of radioactive substances are supplied as well as an electroscope to measure radiation. However, the set will not make an atomic bomb.

WILSON CLOUD CHAMBER enables pint-sized Oppenheimers to trace the paths of 10,000-miles-per-second alpha particles (flashes, above) through water-alcohol vapor. Instruction book for the Atomic Energy Lab was written by a former head of the nuclear physics branch of the Office of Naval Research.

Treet is the meat for a nourishing breakfast!

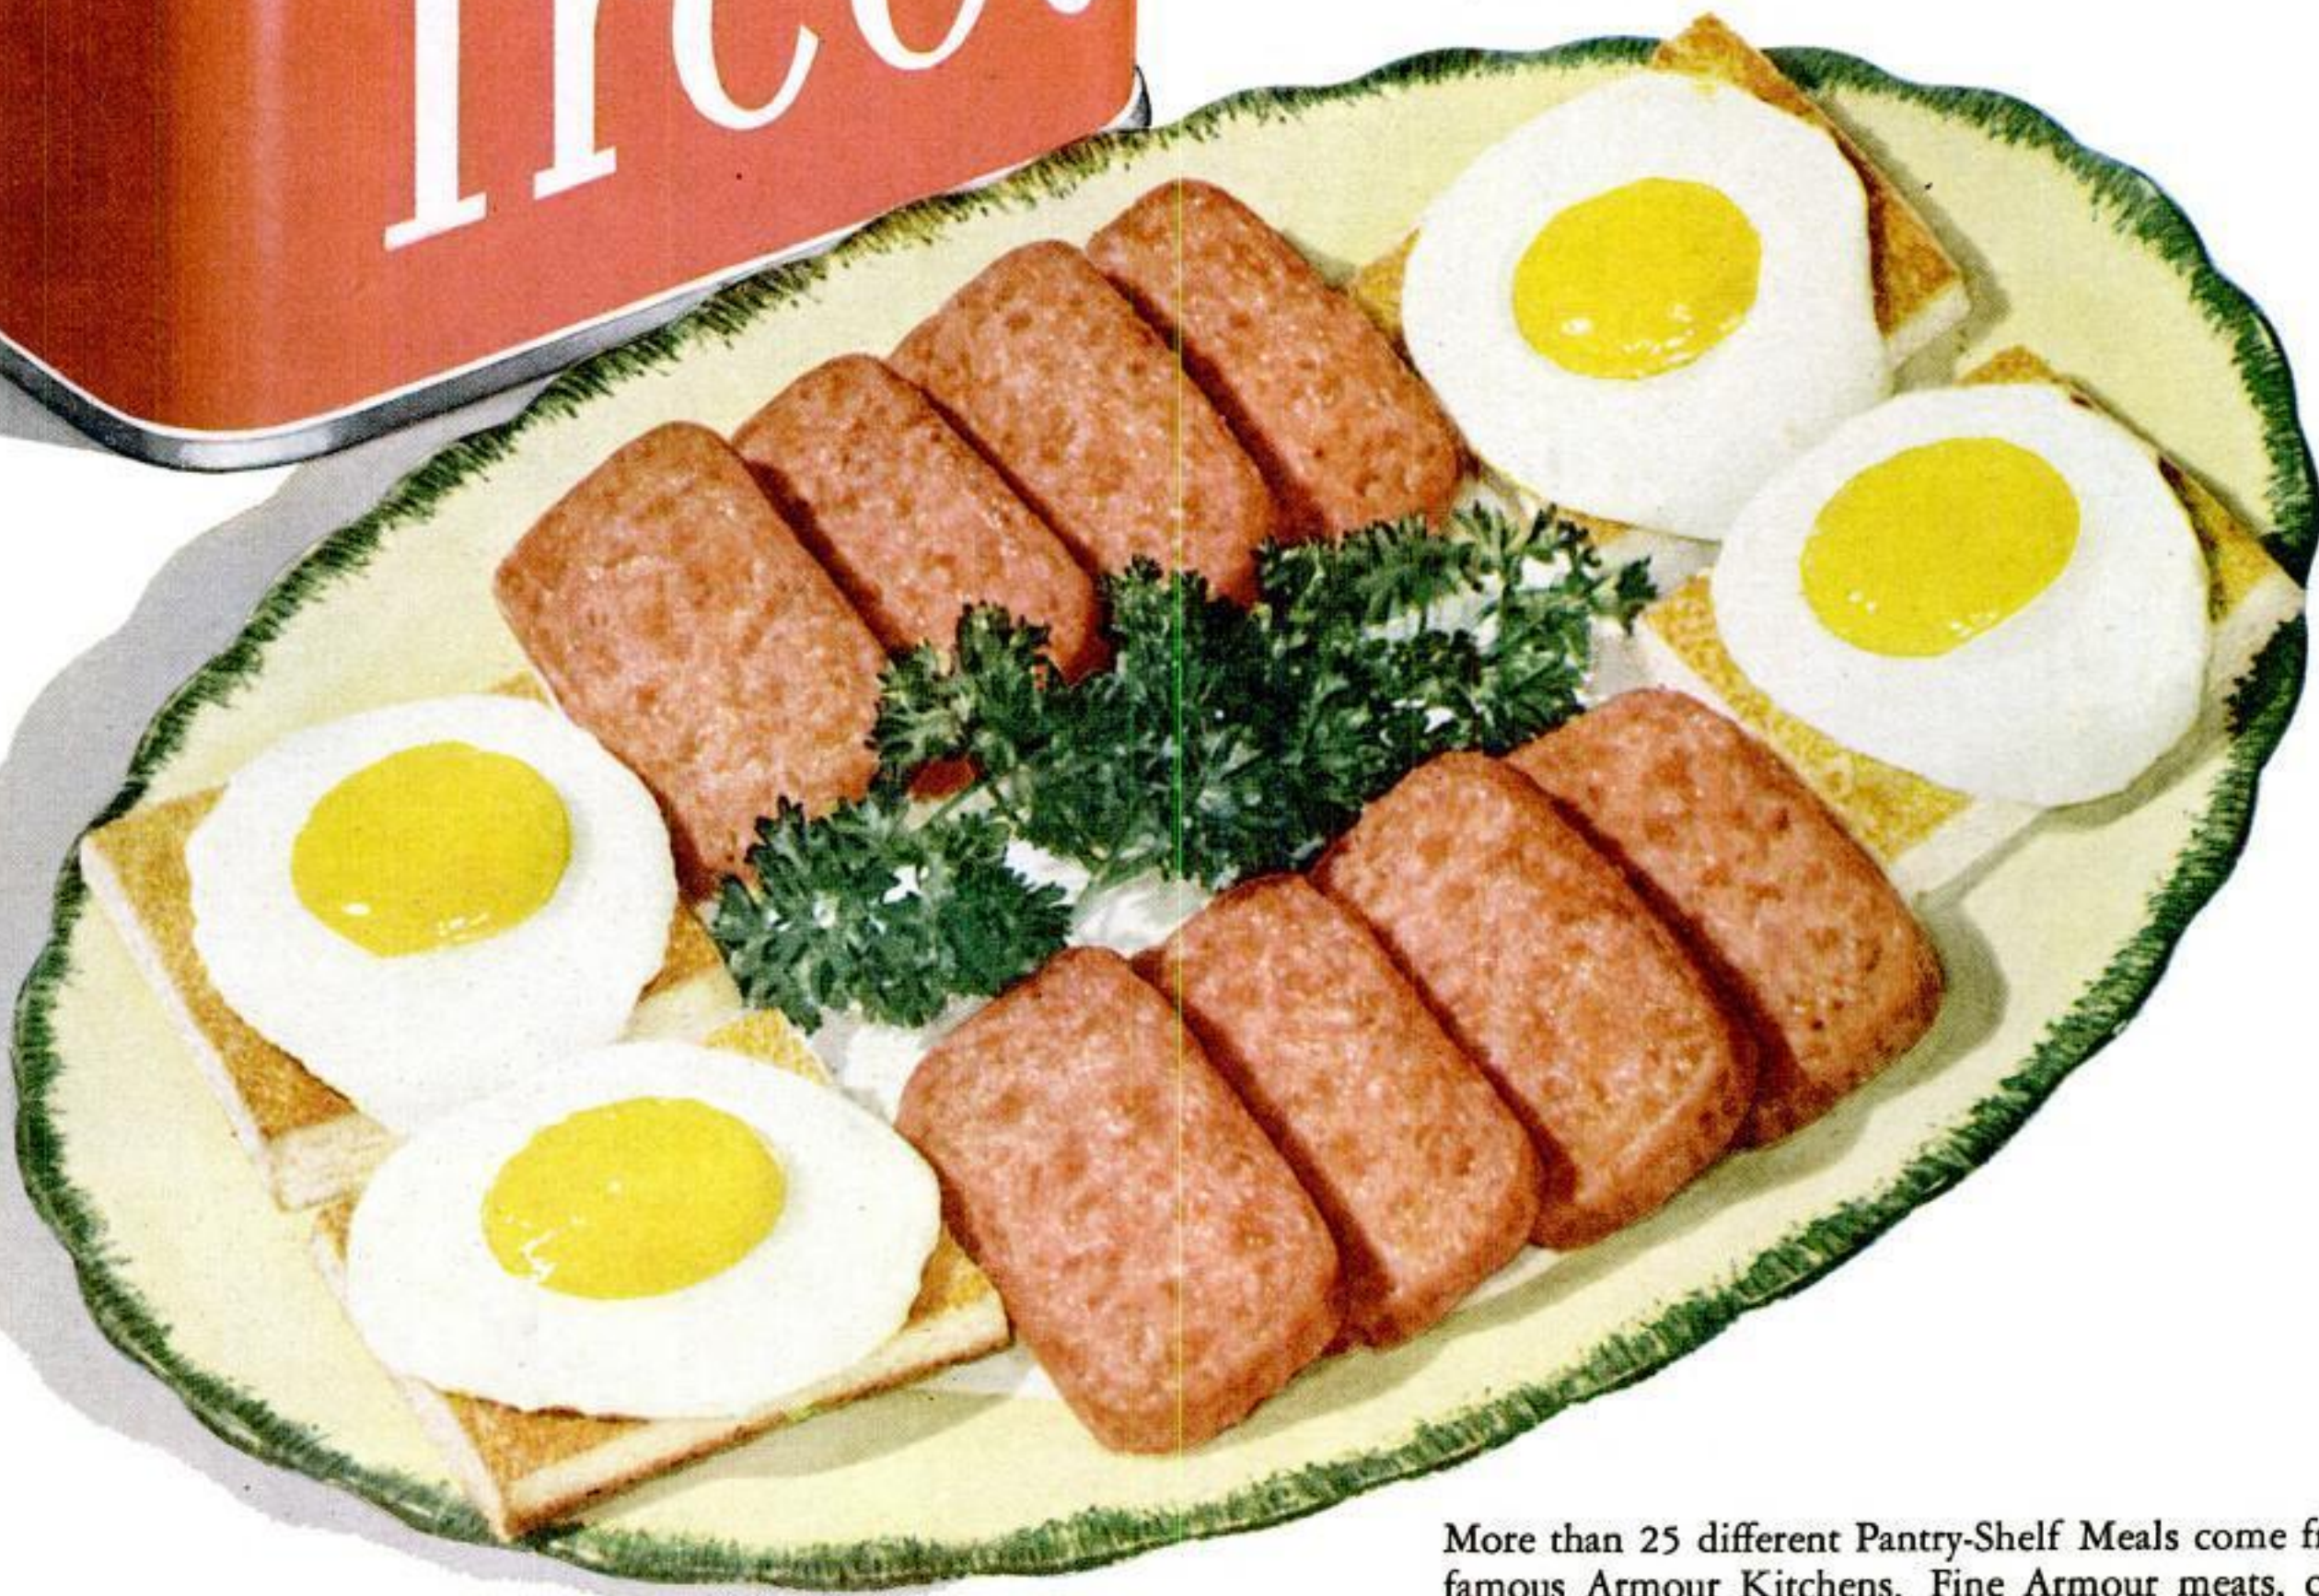

A Nourishing Breakfast makes you feel better, work better, think better.

Meat is one of the most nourishing foods—rich in the protein, vitamins and minerals you need. And Treet is two of the most nourishing meats—tender pork shoulder and sugar-cured ham, blended the special Armour way that makes Treet taste especially good. So inexpensive, too.

You've probably enjoyed Treet for lunch and dinner lots of times. Now, serve it for breakfast this quick and easy way suggested by Marie Gifford, Armour's famous home economist: Cut contents of one can of Treet into several slices. (Armour's exclusive middle-of-tin opener brings Treet out whole—ready for easy slicing.) Fry slices for 3 minutes (that's 1½ minutes on each side) and serve with butter-poached eggs on toast—to satisfy a "man-size" appetite!

NEW! Middle-of-the-tin opener!

Beer belongs...enjoy it

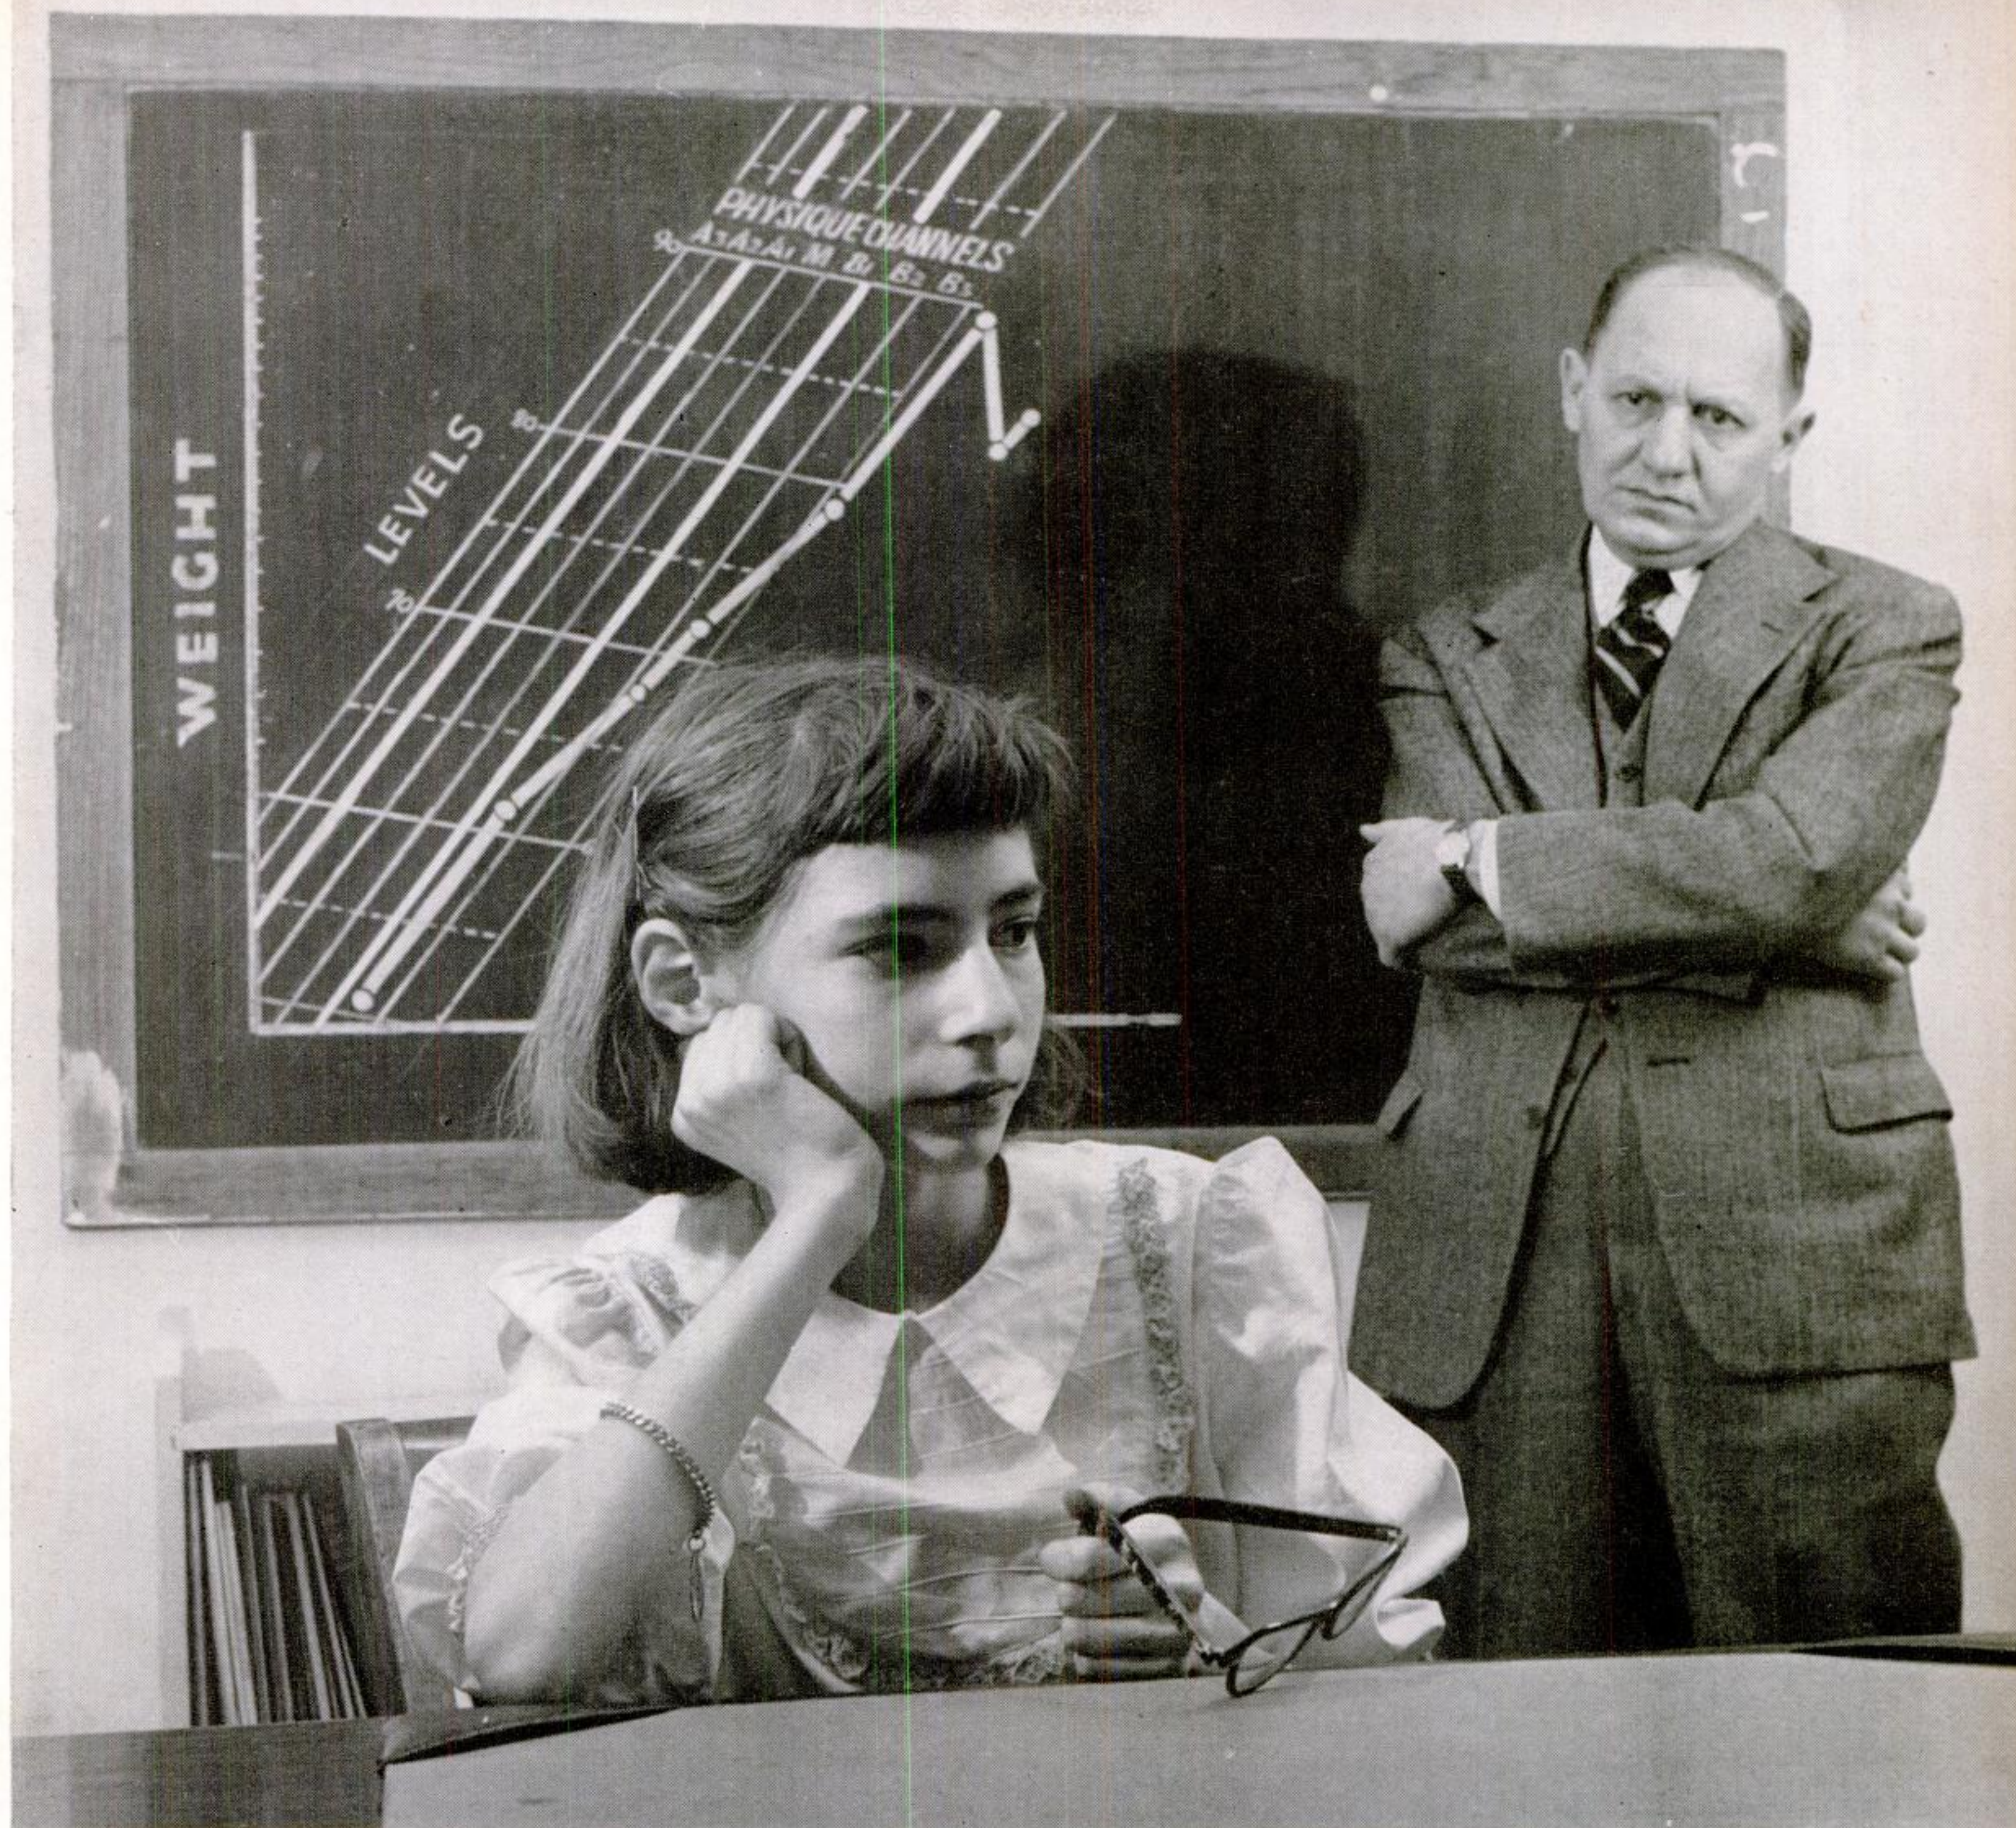

In this home-loving land of ours . . . in this America of kindness, of friendship, of good-humored tolerance . . . perhaps no beverages are more "at home" on more occasions than good American beer and ale.

For beer and ale are the kinds of beverages Americans like. They belong—to pleasant living, to good fellowship, to sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy them, this too belongs—to our own American heritage of personal freedom.

GIRL, 12, WHOSE CHART IS IN BACKGROUND, PONDS QUESTION OF PSYCHIATRIST O. B. MARKEY, WHO PROBES EMOTIONAL UPSET THAT HAS SLOWED HER GROWTH

GRID CREATOR, Pediatrician Norman C. Wetzel, studied higher math, worked 14 years to develop chart.

HOW CHILDREN SHOULD GROW

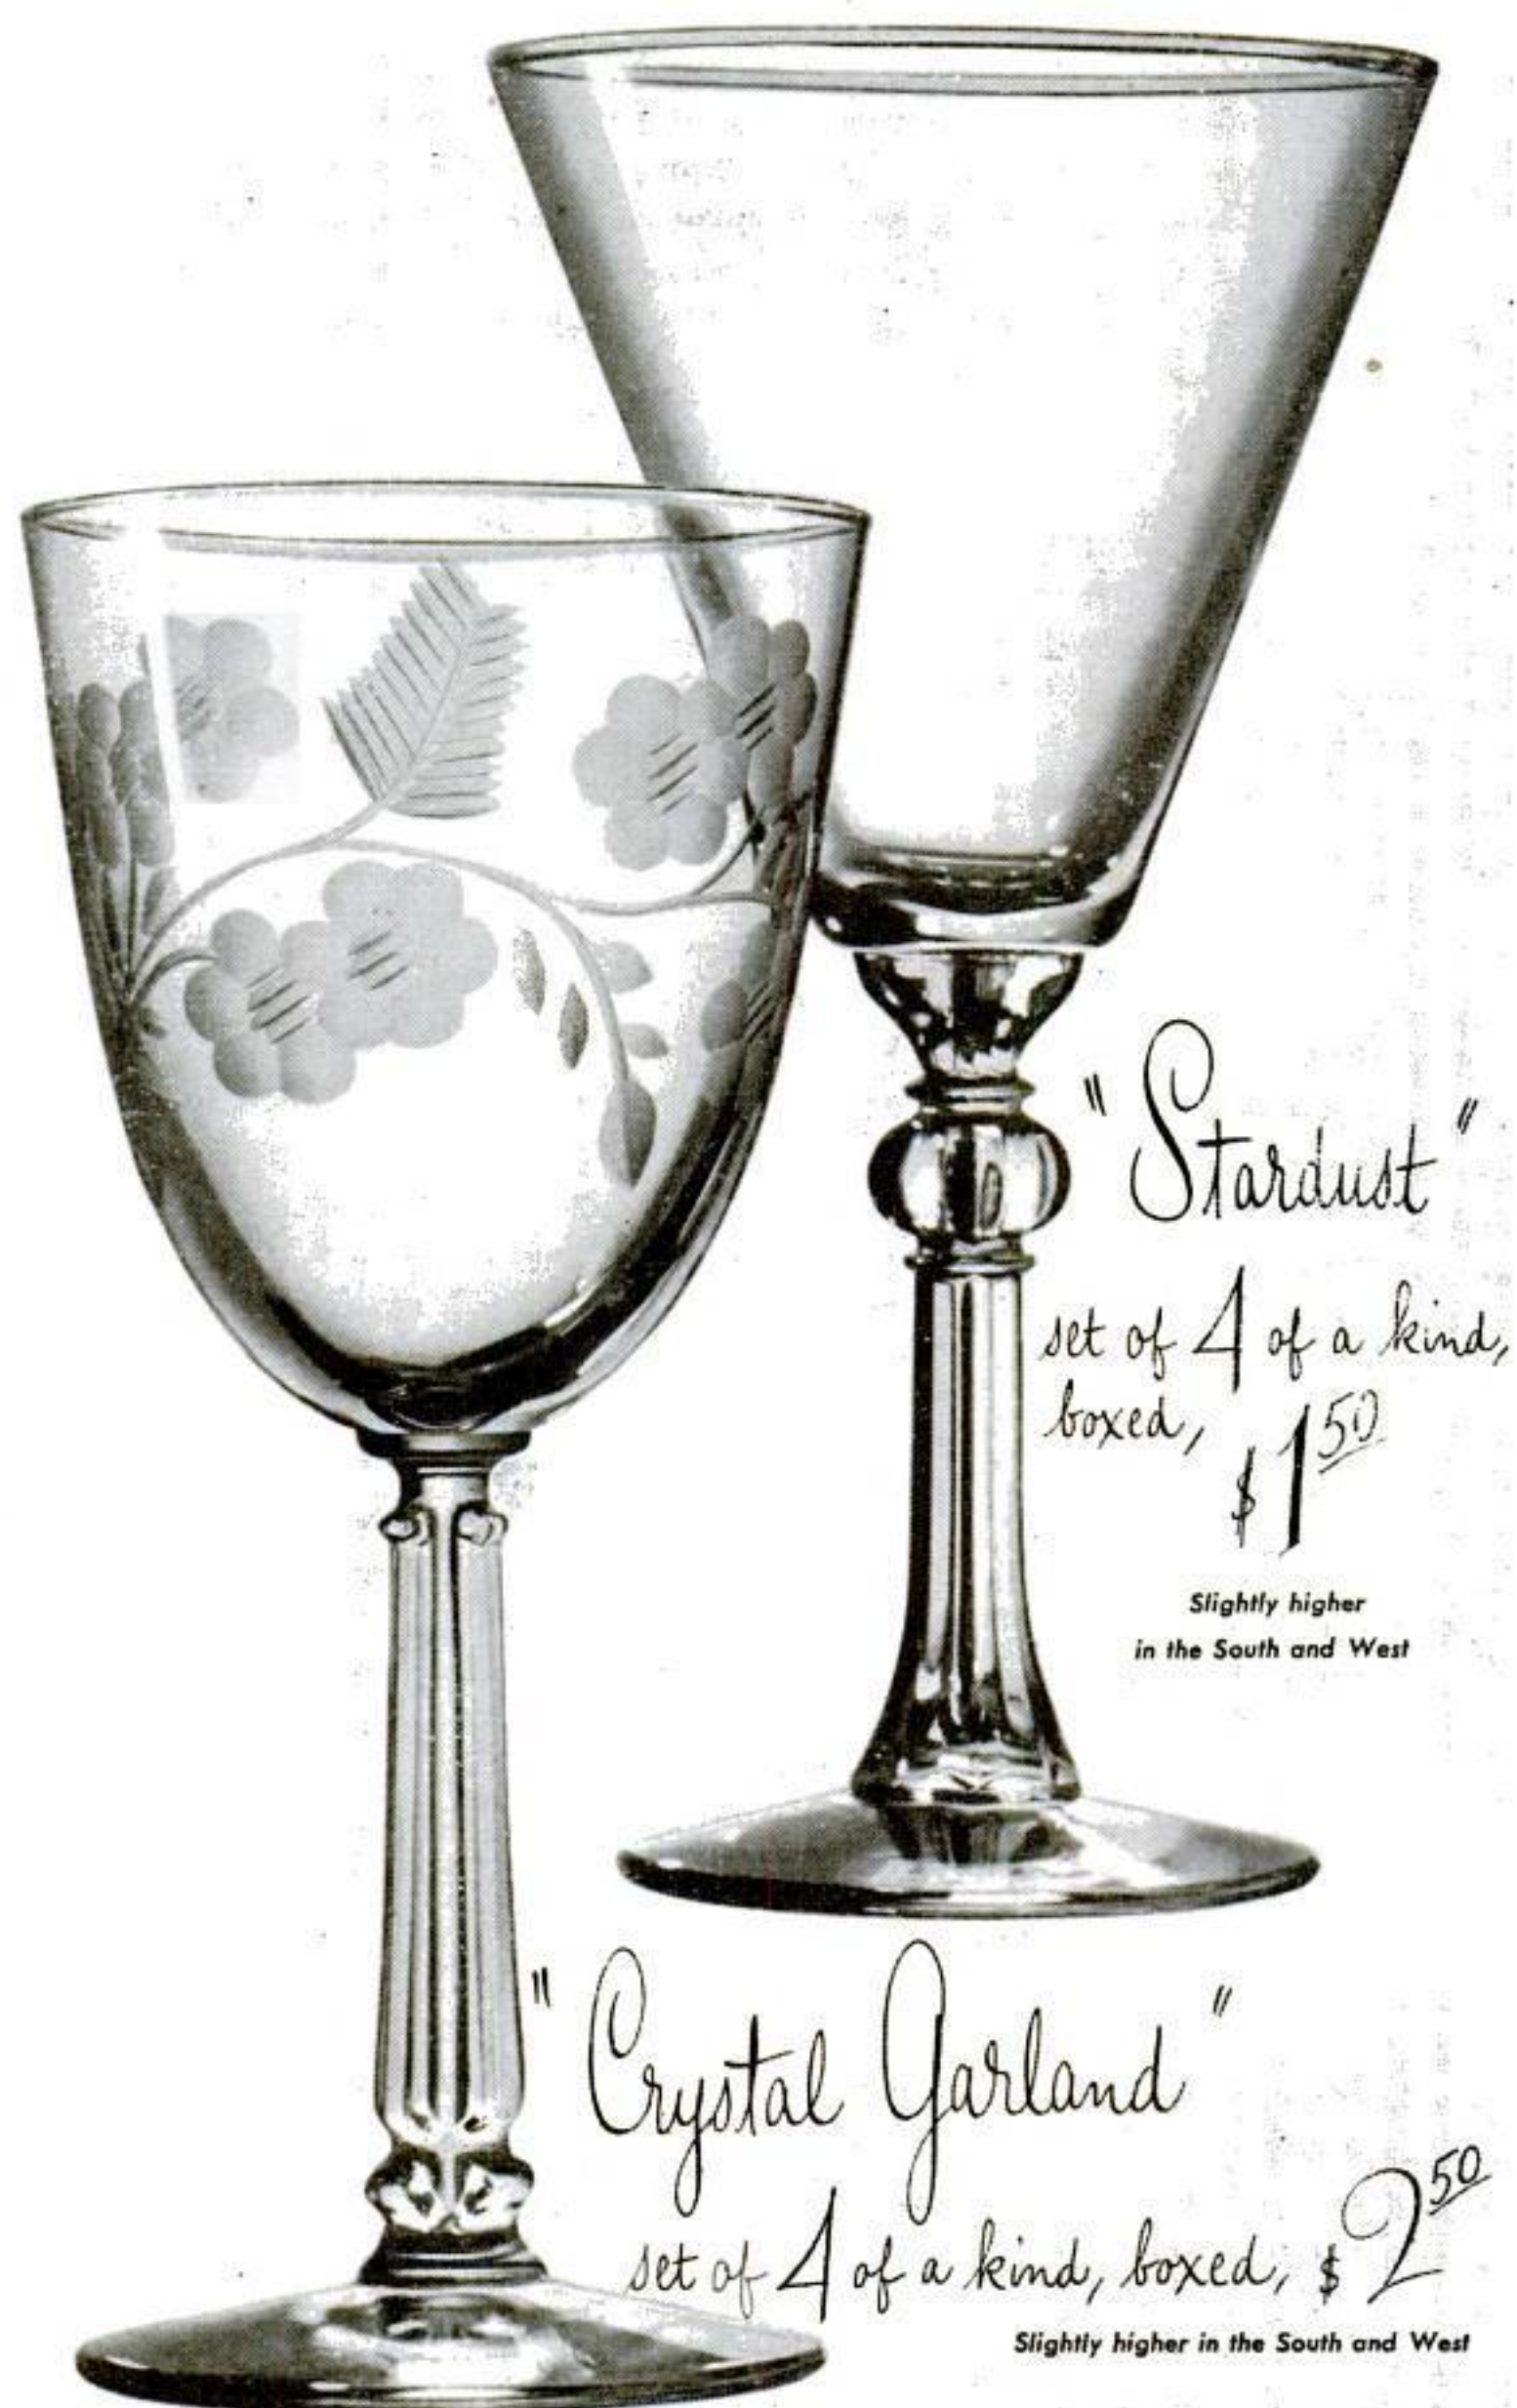

Grid discards "average size," charts progress of seven body types

For several generations, parents and pediatricians have felt that a child, to be physically normal, had to conform to an ideal weight and height—one that supposedly represented an average for youngsters of the same age and sex. But some time ago Dr. Norman C. Wetzel of Cleveland began to think it meaningless to strike an average for children of basically different body sizes and shapes. He worked out a gridlike chart which described seven normal hereditary types of body shape, from obese to skinny, and mapped what he calls "physique channels" (pp. 80, 81) for each type.

So long as a growing child advances steadily in his own channel, his weight and height are considered normal. But when a periodic physical examination shows that he is veering out of his own channel, growth trouble is indicated. This may be caused by glandular disturbance, serious malnutrition or the early stages of a disease like tuberculosis or diabetes. Dr. Wetzel's grid now is in widespread use as a sort of alarm box for many physical defects. Recently it has been used to prove for the first time that normal physical growth can actually be retarded by emotional disturbance.

NORMAL GROWTH is illustrated by 21 children, from 5 to 17 years of age, who stand on an enlarged replica of Wetzel grid. physique channel. During same period the other boy veered far from his original channel into the very thin group (B-3) and now is smaller and thinner than his healthier friend. POLE CLIMBERS, all at the same stage of total body size but in different channels of body shape, demonstrate physical performance typical of each channel. The girls in this picture are pupils at Cleveland's Paul Revere School.

ABNORMAL GROWTH is apparent in four of boys above, A, B, D and E. Boy in center is normal; his growth pattern always stays in own channel (C). These boys and the girl on page 79 stay at Bellefaire Children's Home, Cleveland.

TO WATCH FOR ECONOMY in the new engines, along with their stepped-up power, cars are run constantly at the GM Proving Ground with gasoline consumption measured by the ounce.

THE KEY TO A GENERAL
Your key to Greater Value

CHEVROLET

TO LIFT AUTOMOTIVE POWER to new levels, research had to explore, molecule by molecule, the deepest secrets of fuels, as well as metals and finished engines.

TO HELP MAKE HIGH-COMPRESSION engines that deliver smooth-running power, sensitive eyes, ears and instruments study them in action, probing always for facts that lead to better performance.

Key to purring power

You'll find one of the big news stories for 1950 motoring right in General Motors engines.

With high-compression performance, these power plants are designed to get the utmost out of today's fuels.

And this demonstrates the dramatic results that can come from constant striving to make things better. For it all grew out of a purposeful search in research, engineering and production—a search for more efficient automotive power.

The end-results of this work are more and more horsepower per pound of engine—more and more mileage per gallon of gasoline—and smoother, longer-lasting engines.

In short, you get power that adds a plus to GM value. Any dealer in GM cars can show you how and why.

A TECHNICIAN LOWERS HIS CAMERA TO GET THE VIEW OF ACTRESS FAYE EMERSON WHICH HAS BECOME ONE OF THE NOTABLE SIGHTS ON TELEVISION SCREENS

FAYE'S DECOLLETE MAKES TV MELEE

Television's neckline controversy, for months a matter of minor skirmishes, has become a public controversy with Faye Emerson's announcement on her weekly program that she had been criticized for her neckline, which is one of the lowest and most exuberant on TV. According to Faye's critics, the dresses worn by Faye and many of her sister stars (p. 90) threaten the equilibrium of the U.S. home.

TV networks do not welcome controversy and one studio, which reminds its actors that they are guests in a family living room, keeps a bouquet of roses on hand as a standard prop. Whenever an actress turns up with a too-low neckline, the bouquet is pinned on to conceal her bosom. Faye, however, insists that gowns like the one she is wearing above are simply what she always wears at 11 p.m., the time of her show, and has carried her case to her own audience. Ninety-five percent of those who answered her poll said they would be delighted to have Faye in their living rooms just as she was.

IN THE WARM CAROLINA SUN A COUPLE OF SLEEK STEEPLECHASERS STAND AT ATTENTION WHILE THE JUDGES LOOK THEM OVER AT AIKEN'S HORSE SHOW

BIG WEEK AT AIKEN

HORSES AND HORSY SOCIETY WIND UP WINTER SEASON

The country around Aiken, S.C. is fine for horses—the water good, the climate mild, the hills rolling. It is also fine for horse lovers, and for more than half a century the east's wealthy horsey set has made Aiken its winter social center. Just as spring begins, the season comes to its climax in Sports Week, which plunges Aiken into seven lively days of horse shows, horse racing, polo games and drag hunts.

In Hitchcock Woods green-coated riders thunder over brush after the hounds. The younger set, including such teen-agers as Aileen Wood (cover), sweeps into town on vacation from prep schools in New England and finishing schools in Virginia. Smaller fry at Aiken Preparatory School have their big track-and-field day (p. 98).

The days are busy but there is a conspicuous absence of night life in Aiken except for a few parties in the homes of such notables as F. Ambrose Clark and Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloan. There, as always in Aiken, conversation revolves completely around 230 wintering thoroughbred race horses, 120 trotters, 70 hunters and jumpers, 91 polo ponies and the scads of just plain riding horses. One person who can take horses or leave them alone is Eugene Grace, retired president of Bethlehem Steel, who much prefers golf and at 73 manages sometimes to match his age and his golf score. For one day Golfer Grace (p. 97) takes the play away from the horses by helping bring in the country's best golf pros and shooting along with them in the Aiken open.

AIKEN'S WIDE ROADS ARE LEFT MOSTLY UNPAVED FOR CONVENIENCE OF HORSES

TWO-YEAR-OLDS GET FIRST RACING TESTS

There used to be 17 polo fields in operation at Aiken, and the country's best players were down there every season. But now there are only three fields being used and, with polo on the wane, the horsey interest is turning more and more to flat racing. Big stables like Greentree and Brookmeade have decided to make Aiken their permanent winter training quarters. A new track was built just before the war. Each spring in the "public trials" untried 2-year-old colts and fillies, being readied for their first year of racing, get their first taste of actual competition.

The public trials are horse racing in the classic style, leisurely and uncommercial—no purses, no grandstand, no totalizator or betting facilities other than a few stray bookmakers. The horses show their greenness by trembling at the thunder of hoofs, shying away from shadows, weaving as they run. Since the Daily Racing Form and other dopesheets do not carry Aiken past performances, some sharp-eyed professionals get the jump on their colleagues by going down to Aiken and making notations for future reference. The most impressive of the 2-year-olds this year was Brookmeade Stable's Dutch Lane, a brown colt that scampered home a three-lengths winner (bottom, center) in the respectable time of $23\frac{2}{5}$ seconds for the quarter mile. Some other Aiken winners tabbed in clockers' notebooks: Benbow, Two Rainbows, Torch, Bold, Berne.

↑ IN THE MORNING, just after dawn, Greentree Stable horses work out. Galloping horses keep to the outside, leaving rail open for horses that are working faster.

AT BARN Jockey Atkinson discusses his Greentree mounts with Trainer Gaver.

AT RACES Owner Jock Whitney (right) is being congratulated after his horse wins.

▼ IN THE AFTERNOON Brookmeade's Dutch Lane wins over a field of 2-year-olds in his first race. He is due to make his bigtime debut in the current Jamaica meet.

SUBSURFACE of outfits above can be worn alone. Black silk sheath has a bodice boned like a strapless slip, costs $89.95 with coat. Plaid cotton evening gown, copy of a Balenciaga design, is $40 with coat.

Sheers

See-through fabrics bring uncovering to surface

Women usually start putting on transparent dresses in the summer dog days to keep, or at least to look, cool. But this year sheer materials, like silk and cotton organdy or voile, have come in well ahead of heat waves as a big spring day and evening fashion. This has caused designers to do something different about what goes under them. The new sheers display undersheaths that can be worn alone or slips cut in such elegant fabrics they are obviously meant to show.

OVERDRESS of cotton organdy (left) opens in back (Emily Wilkins). Striped sheer apron (center) has matching gloves (Bonnie Cashin). Blouse and skirt (right) come separately (Nelly de Grab, $8.95, $10.95).

SECOND LAYER of dresses at top are: printed calico ($39.95 with overdress); black sheath ($35, apron $18 extra); polka-dot bra and petticoat of tangerine and black taffeta (John Norman, $19.95 together).

THE PROBLEM KING OF EGYPT

VISITORS to Egypt who happen to see King Farouk in the cabarets which he frequents are invariably surprised to find him a porcine, thick-featured man with thinning hair and the pompous bearing of a bank president. To most Westerners it seems like only yesterday that a slender, gracious youth named Farouk became the first king of a united and independent Egypt since the Pharaohs.

It has been almost 13 years. During this time the shy young man who came to the throne at the age of 16 has been married and divorced, has gained about 90 pounds, has acquired almost absolute power in the world's strongest Arab state and has become a favorite target of salacious and malicious gossip. Time has wrought changes in Farouk's personality as well as in his physique. At 30 he is a moody, petulant, headstrong man whom no one except a British diplomat has ever told to shut up or go to hell since he became the ruler of 20 million Egyptians.

You do not have to be in Egypt long to discover that Farouk's character has almost as many facets as he has acquaintances. Even people who know him well will contradict each other when trying to describe him to strangers. Some remember him as likable and unpretentious. A British correspondent recalls how the king knocked at the door of his beach house in Alexandria one morning last summer. Farouk was wearing swimming trunks and carrying a basket of freshly caught shrimp. "Oh look!" cried the correspondent's 8-year-old daughter, "the kingfisher!" Delighted, Farouk came in and passed a neighborly morning relaxing on the porch and playing with the little girl. More often Farouk is coldly brusque. Last year a beauty contest was held at the Auberge des Pyramides to select Miss Egypt of 1949. No sooner had the judges announced their decision than a message was sent over from the king's table indicating that His Majesty was displeased with the verdict. The judges hastily reversed themselves and awarded the cup to another girl.

Many persons who know the king insist that he is not as frivolous as he seems and that he takes his royal duties seriously. They point to his concern over expanding the educational facilities of a country where more than 70% of the population is illiterate. During his reign education has become compulsory for children between 7 and 12, nearly 3,000 elementary schools have been built, the number of secondary schools has been quadrupled, and a new university named for him has been established in Alexandria.

Farouk can be an entertaining host and has an engaging, if somewhat bizarre, sense of humor. He is fond of amusing his guests at the Royal Automobile Club, which he visits almost daily, with imitations of Cairo street hawkers or by whistling, at which he has been adept since childhood. Driving home, he likes to startle friends with a horn that reproduces the sound of a dog being run over. Yet his informality can be deceptive. There are times when the king is as touchy about protocol as the stuffiest of diplomatic hostesses. He still speaks waspishly of Stanton Griffis, the former U.S. Ambassador to Egypt, who made the mistake of addressing the king as "Your Excellency" instead of "Your Majesty" when he formally presented his credentials.

Pampered, obstinate, capricious

LIKE a pampered child who is used to having his own way, Farouk becomes obstinate if contradicted. When he capriciously decided to marry a 16-year-old commoner named Nariman Sadek last December, he blithely ignored foreign criticism and the indignation of those of his subjects who felt that it was too high-handed even for royalty to grab another man's fiancée. Nor was he deterred by the fact that he had seen the girl only once.

Under the circumstances it is hardly surprising that Farouk's private life furnishes scandalous stories, some of them true, to fuel the endless gossip exchanged at the Long Bar of Sheppard's Hotel, around the tea tables at Groppi's, in the lounge of the Semiramis Hotel and the half dozen other places where Cairo's cosmopolitan cafe society gathers two or three times a day for Turkish coffee, Scotch whisky and small talk. Most of these stories find their way back to the palace and have made Farouk inordinately sensitive to criticism. Last fall, when a well-meaning undersecretary suggested to the court chamberlain that the king should be more discreet or at least less noisy at the late parties he gave in a small apartment near the Royal Automobile Club, the young man was abruptly transferred from his post in the Department of Agriculture to a diplomatic job in Geneva. Farouk is particularly touchy about the widespread criticism of his promiscuity where women are concerned. Speaking of this to a Western diplomat not long ago, he complained that he violated only one of the sins which the Koran enjoins Moslems to avoid but that no one gave him any credit for his innocence on all the others. Young women who boast of or otherwise discuss their relations with the king are also sent out of the country on short notice. Foreign correspondents and the local press have explicit instructions to write no story concerning Farouk unless it has been cleared through the palace. Private mail is spot-checked by postal censors and any slighting references to the king deleted.

Totalitarian trappings

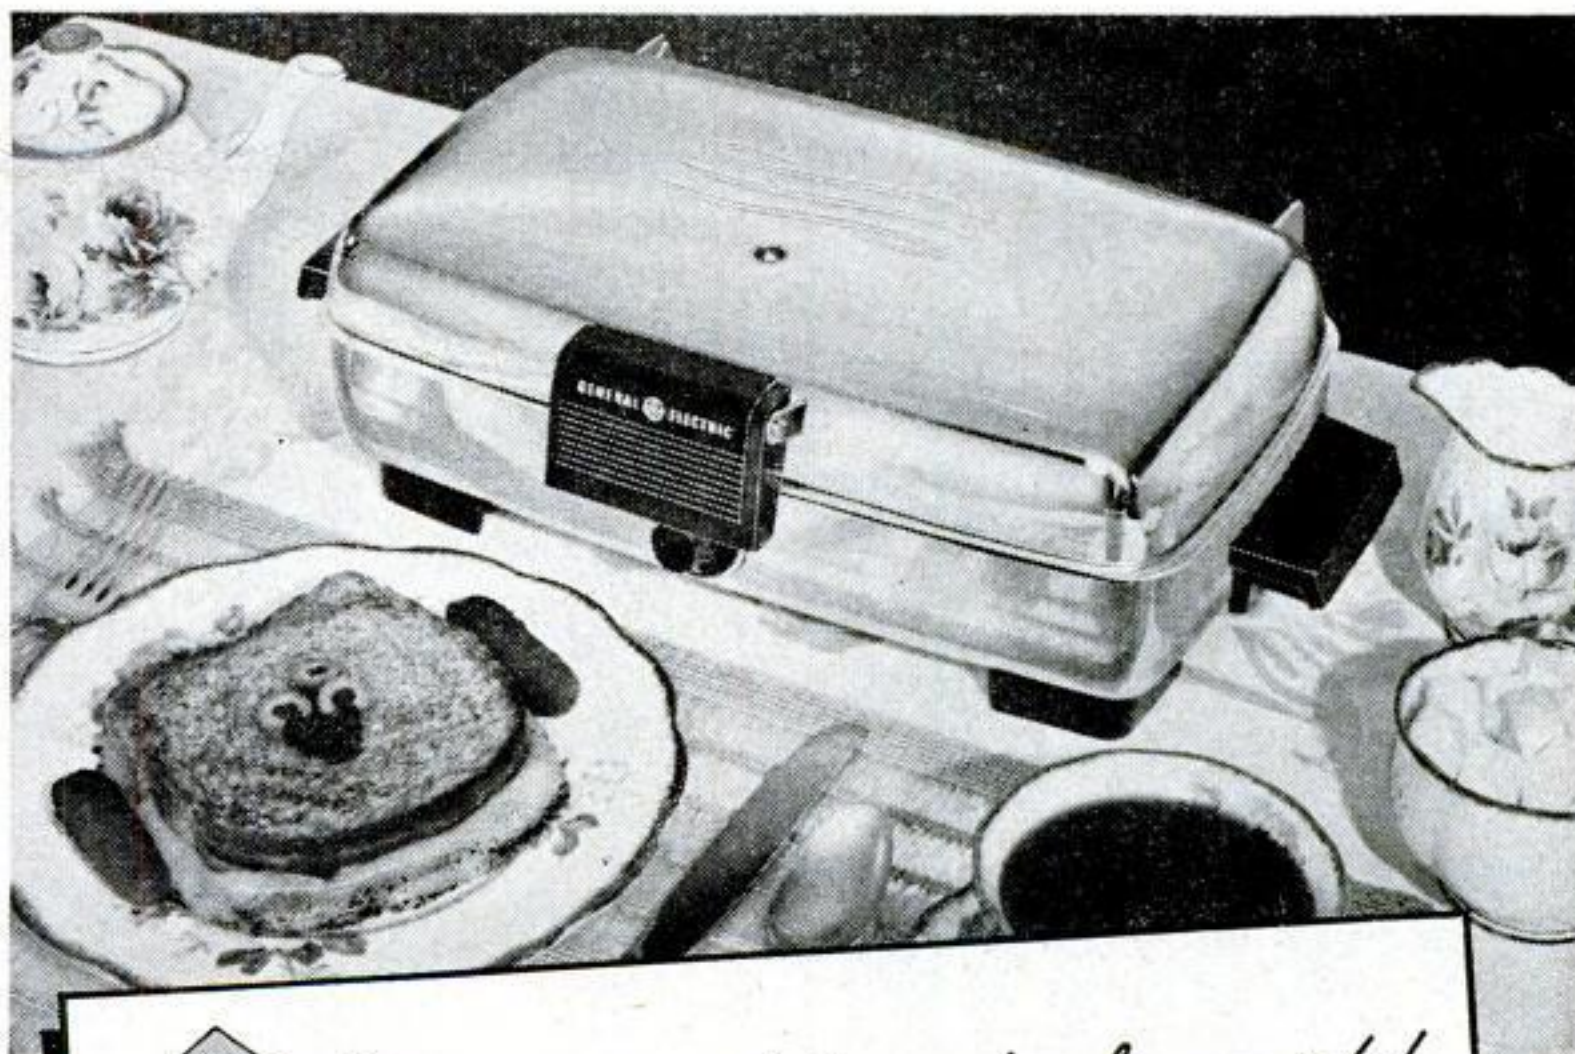

THESE trappings of a totalitarian state are sometimes shocking to Americans who come to Egypt expecting to find a constitutional monarchy of the Scandinavian type. According to the 1923 constitution the king is supposed to exercise his executive authority through his ministers and not in conjunction with them. The cabinet is supposed to be responsible to parliament, not to Farouk. Actually the king has come to do pretty much as he pleases. Americans are also shocked by the contrast between the mode of life of the thin stratum of wealthy Egyptians and the rest of the population. Why are we striving to improve relations with a country in which social injustice is so palpable? And why is there no sign of unrest among the perennially impoverished fellahin—those 19 million Egyptian peasants whose standard of living is so stark and primitive as to be scarcely human?

The answer to the first question is that this curious and most ancient of civilized countries—95% of whose area is an arid waste—has emerged as the leading political unit in the group of Arab states that lie in the strategic Middle East. It was Farouk himself, prodded by certain advisers, who took the initiative in grouping all of these states together in the framework of the Arab League. It is no fault of Farouk's that the League is temporarily in abeyance. What has hurt the League most is the personal ambition of King Abdullah of Jordan, a British puppet, coupled with the beating which its disorganized member states took in the war against Israel.

The answer to the second question—why the fellahin passively accept a social system that exploits them—is simply that they have never expected anything of life but toil and hardship. Unless their rulers become especially oppressive, Egyptian peasants are uncomplaining. And it must be said that under Farouk they have much to be thankful for. In the past eight years more than 100 agricultural training and advisory centers have been established in every province. Villages are regularly visited by representatives of the Department of Agriculture, who provide peasants with technical guidance in the manner of American county agents. Loans on easy terms have been made available to farmers. And the government is making strenuous efforts to stamp out endemic diseases, such as bilharziasis, which have plagued the fellah for centuries and contributed to his misery.

With the small minority of Egyptians who are educated and politically conscious—a growing class—Farouk's prestige has been steadily deteriorating, and it is fair to say that as a result his position is shakier than it has ever been since he formally became king on July 29, 1937. In his more cynical moments the king himself refers flippantly to his future. "In a few years," he remarked not long ago, "there will be only five kings in the world—the king of England and the four kings in a pack of cards."

FOUR YEARS of self-indulgence have made a big difference in Farouk's figure. In 1944 (left) he wore a natty beard and carried a Mohammedan rosary—he was hoping at this time to become Caliph of the Moslem world. In 1948 he carried a marshal's baton when he saw his troops leave for the war in Palestine.

To understand why Farouk has lost popularity, you must look back at the factors which have shaped his character and produced his erratic personality. The most significant was unquestionably the sudden death of King Fuad in 1936, an event that cut short Farouk's education and thrust him into a role for which he had almost no preparation. Farouk is a king who never went to college and has traveled little in the world. At 16 he was suddenly surrounded by courtiers who catered to his whims and seldom dared to contradict him. The tragedy of Farouk is that he never had a chance to acquire mental discipline or a balanced sense of values.

Farouk was born in Abdin palace in Cairo on Feb. 11, 1920, three years after his father had succeeded Hussein as khedive. He was the direct descendant of Mohammed Ali, an Albanian tobacco planter who was installed by the Turks as viceroy of Egypt in 1805 and who founded the dynasty that has ruled this more or less independent country ever since.

Like his younger sisters, Fawzia, Faiza, Faika and Fathia—fat, pleasure-loving Fuad loved names beginning with F—young Farouk was brought up by a foreign governess and learned to speak English and French, as well as Arabic, Egypt's official language. His childhood was a cloistered one even by royal standards. His playmates were young aristocrats and the children of palace employes. (One of the latter, an Italian boy named Antonio Pugli, whose father was the palace electrician, later became the royal barber and today is one of Farouk's few intimates, with the title of bey.)

Sasi becomes Farida

IN 1935 Farouk was sent to England to attend the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. Six months later Fuad died, and Farouk returned to Egypt. The next year, with his mother and his sisters, he went to Switzerland for a holiday. It was there that he met Sasi Naz Zulficar, the pretty 15-year-old daughter of his mother's lady in waiting and the girl he married six months after he took the throne as the first boy king of Egypt since ancient times. He inherited his father's penchant for the letter F and called her Farida; 10 years later he wept as he signed the decree dissolving their marriage.

For a while Farouk and Farida were probably the world's most popular royal couple and certainly the handsomest. Bewildered and insecure, Farouk responded clumsily to the love his subjects showed for him and his bride. Once he flew his plane along the coast and dropped celluloid balls on the mud huts of the fellahin, who were urged to redeem them for candy at royal depots. At home

"Taxes sure are hitting close to home"

"My name is Eugene Young. I live at 111 Muir Avenue, Eardstown, Kentucky.

"I'm mighty proud of my family. In the picture you see only part of it — my wife and me; my sons, Paul, attending college, and John, attending business school; and my married daughter, Eugenia. Then there's another son, Bruce, another daughter, Martha Ann, and Billy Boone, the finest grandson a man ever had. We lost our oldest son, William, in the war.

"Back in the thirties I was a highway worker. Times were tough and jobs were scarce. Remember? Maybe you were out of work for months, as I was.

"Then came repeal and I had the good luck to get a distillery job. I've been there ever since — and today I'm warehouse superintendent.

"Looking back, every cent I've earned to take good care of my wife and children for the last 15 years, I've made in the liquor business.

"Today, the thing that's bothering me—and the same's true of my neighbors—is that liquor taxes are getting too high for everybody.

"Here's what I mean:

"When you buy a bottle of blended whiskey costing say $3.75 you have to pay $1.56 in Federal Excise Tax. On top of that you have to pay about 50¢ more for other Federal, state and local taxes. That means the total tax bill on every bottle is over $2.00.

"Think of it! . . . over half of every dollar you pay for $3.75 whiskey goes for taxes!

"As you and I know, a lot of people can't, or won't, pay such tax-inflated prices for legal whiskey. So what do they do? They buy moonshine whiskey which pays no taxes to anybody — with the result that our Government loses millions in taxes every year.

"As I see it, if sky-high taxes cause a drastic shrinkage in the sale of legal alcoholic beverages, you and I—whether we drink or not—will have to dig a lot deeper to make up the tax loss.

"What's more, I'd be out of a job—along with a million other men and women who now make a legal and respectable living in the alcoholic beverage business.

"That's why I say, 'Taxes sure are hitting close to home!' . . . your home, right along with mine!"

Eugene Young's message is sponsored by the producers and distributors of alcoholic beverages. As citizens and businessmen, we stand for the following aims in your community:

- the encouragement of moderation by word and by example.
- the licensing of only orderly places of business.
- the strict observance and enforcement of the law.

LATEST FAROUK SCANDAL revolves around 16-year-old Nariman Sadek. She was engaged to an Egyptian functionary when she caught Farouk's fancy. The engagement was broken and Farouk now plans to make her his queen.

he was guided by a handful of advisers who were generally more preoccupied with their own advancement than with enhancing the prestige of the monarchy. His leisure hours were largely spent in the company of Italians who were acting under orders from their embassy to debauch the young king and thereby strengthen Fascist Italy's position in the Middle East. Skilled Italian Jezebels were brought all the way from Rome; for them the young king, who had never known the life of a bachelor prince, was as easy a pushover as an American college boy in Place Pigalle. Cairo began hearing about notorious palace parties and the world began talking about Farouk as the playboy king.

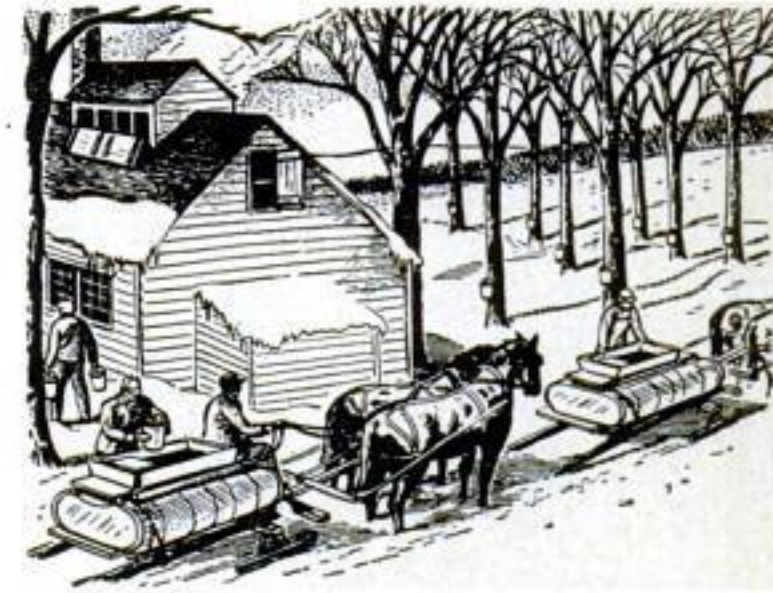

Farouk's boyhood hero was his grandfather, Khedive Ismail, a grandiose and gusty gentleman who had a harem of 3,000 women and who died in 1895 trying to gulp down two bottles of champagne at one draught. As he grew up Farouk's affection and admiration was focused on three people: his wife, Farida; his principal adviser, Ahmed Hassanein Pasha, and a politician named Mustafa El Nahas Pasha. Farida has left him; Hassanein is dead; and Nahas is responsible for his first and bitterest political disillusionment.

The first betrayal

NAHAS, the son of a well-to-do peasant, rose to prominence in Egyptian affairs as leader of the Wafdist party, a nationalist movement dedicated to driving the British out of Egypt. But in 1935, at the age of 59, Nahas married a young woman who had more ambition than scruples. She saw no advantage in politics unless it could be made to pay off; this meant keeping her husband in power, if necessary at the expense of Wafdist principles. Gradually Nahas succumbed to the influence of his young bride; thus it was that he found himself, seven years later, in the incongruous role of Britain's choice for prime minister. For this Farouk has never forgiven him.

It happened in the winter of 1941-42, when the British military position in the Middle East was extremely precarious. The British trusted Nahas because he was relatively honest and because they knew his wife would be pro-Ally so long as British troops held Egypt; they also trusted the incumbent prime minister, Hussein Sirry Pasha. But they did not trust Farouk and his entourage of Italians. Once, when Sir Miles Lampson, the British ambassador (who had an Italian wife), suggested to the king that he remove his

can you name
another invention

that has helped women so much?

THINK HARD! The last few years have brought forth many scientific devices to make women's lives easier and happier ...but how many of these inventions have been actually as important as the Tampax method for monthly protection? How many are so useful every month the year round? And how many of them apply to all classes of women—married or single, richer or poorer, flying the air-lines or sitting at home?

Tampax is a necessity. And on those troublesome get-you-down days you will be more than thankful. No belts, pins or external pads. No odor or chafing. No bulges or ridges under clothing. For Tampax is worn internally. It's so small it's only one-ninth the bulk of the external kind and so comfortable you can't feel it while wearing it.

Doctor-invented Tampax is made of pure absorbent cotton contained in dainty, slender patented applicators. Disposal is no problem. Sold at drug and notion counters in 3 absorbency-sizes: Regular, Super, Junior. Month's supply slips into your purse. Look for Tampax Vendor in restrooms throughout the United States. ON HIS WEDDING DAY in 1938, Farouk stood solemnly between his bride, Queen Farida (left), whom he divorced in 1948, and his mother, Queen Nazli.

Fascist-minded advisers, Farouk replied, "I will get rid of my Italians, Sir Miles, when you get rid of yours."

The situation came to a head later in January 1942. Farouk had gone away on a holiday and Sirry, acting under British pressure, broke relations with Vichy France, whose Cairo embassy had become a center for Axis espionage. When Farouk returned he flew into a rage. Shortly thereafter Sirry felt obliged to resign, and Farouk indicated that he would appoint Aly Maher Pasha, a man with known pro-German feelings, as prime minister.

At that, the British took off their kid gloves and moved swiftly. On Feb. 4 army tanks rumbled up to Abdin palace as Sir Miles, accompanied by a British general, stalked past startled guards into the king's private quarters. Bluntly and curtly the British ambassador told Farouk he could make Nahas prime minister or abdicate and leave Egypt the next day aboard a British plane.

Furious and humiliated, the king bowed to the British terms, but as the Englishmen took their leave he stood up. "Sir Miles," he said tightly, "you will regret this day."

The Nahas cabinet lasted two years and eight months. In October 1944, when the war had moved away from Egypt, Nahas was dismissed. Although the Wafd was returned to power this year and Nahas once more became prime minister, his relations with the king are still coldly formal.

Farouk's character has also been deeply affected by the failure of his marriage with Farida. As early as 1944 the queen, weary of his flagrant infidelity, asked for a divorce. He refused but permitted her to maintain a separate residence at Koubbeh palace while he remained at Abdin. She had borne him three daughters but no male heirs. As the estrangement persisted, friends urged him to grant the divorce and marry again in the interests of the dynasty. He finally agreed and on Nov. 17, 1948 signed the divorce decree.

Farida has resumed her maiden name and now lives in seclusion in a villa near Cairo. She is still enormously popular among her former subjects, most of whom instinctively sided with her when she left Farouk. Last fall the king was reported to have suggested a reconciliation. Her conditions, which included the dismissal of three of his favorite courtiers, were apparently too severe. Bitterly Farouk then rescinded his previous instructions that she should not remarry and a few weeks later abruptly decided to make Nariman Sadek his queen. While Cairo buzzed with speculation Farida went to a theater in downtown Cairo with a woman companion. As soon as the audience recognized her, people began applauding

TO AVOID THAT GREASY LOOK-KEEP SCALP MORE HYGIENIC!

There's nothing better than Kreml to neatly groom thinning hair or sparse locks. Kreml doesn't look the least bit greasy, sticky or gooey. No dirt-catching film shows through on the scalp. Kreml always keeps hair and scalp looking and feeling so clean. AND SO VERY IMPORTANT—Kreml removes dandruff flakes (more noticeable with sparse hair); it lubricates a dry scalp, giving it a delightful tingle. Change to Kreml today.

and shouting, "No other queen but Farida!" She hurriedly left the theater and has avoided public places ever since.

A third factor affecting Farouk's present personality, and one which has left him confused and forlorn, was the death of Hassanein in a motor accident in 1946. Hassanein was a widely traveled Oxford graduate and a noted explorer and archaeologist. Unlike too many courtiers, he never fawned on Farouk and was not afraid to disagree with him, tactfully. Since Hassanein's death the king's intimates have been mediocre men, parasites in some cases, who are prominent chiefly by virtue of their proximity to the palace. He is estranged from most of his own family except his oldest sister Fawzia. For the past two years his mother and his two youngest sisters, Faika and Fathia, have been living in the U.S., where the queen has been undergoing medical treatment.

Does Farouk have any political philosophy? The question often baffles foreign diplomats. People who have tried to draw him out agree that his politics are compounded of a latent Anglophobia, nourished by the Nahas-Lampson episode; a strong sense of nationalism, and a vague patriarchal conception of himself as a people's monarch.

It is no more surprising for an Egyptian to be anti-British than it is for an Indonesian to be anti-Dutch. In spite of the many things the British did to modernize the country from 1882 to 1922, the fact remains that they came as intruders and stayed on with their troops. Egyptians knew that in private the British referred to them as "wogs," a term which roughly corresponds to the American GI's "gook." The last British troops were evacuated from Cairo in 1946, and today Egypt is a completely sovereign state; but the irritation resulting from decades of British rule will persist for a long time to come. As in Ireland, twisting the lion's tail has become a perennial and sure-fire method of gaining popular support. Politicians and editorial writers are constantly sniping at the presence of a few thousand British troops stationed near the Suez Canal and at the Condominium of 1899, which permits the British to share in the administration of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Farouk's Anglophobia merely reflects the almost unanimous sentiment of his people.

His nationalism is equally understandable. As the first king of a fully independent Egypt, Farouk regards himself as a symbol of Egypt's independence after long subjection to a succession of foreign overlords. So do many of his people. As in most countries which have only recently achieved political independence, Egyptian nationalism can be wildly chauvinistic. A recent brochure about Egypt published by the State Tourism Department and the Ministry of Commerce and Industry speaks of Egypt as "the center of the world," a nation whose wealth "makes other countries more in need of Egypt than Egypt is in need of them" and a country entering a new era "of growing eminence in Middle East affairs, under the guidance and wisdom of its King, His Majesty Farouk I, Whom God Preserve."

THE GARDENS OF ABDIN PALACE in Cairo, Farouk's principal residence, are elaborately landscaped. The king owns four other palaces in Egypt.

Egyptian national feelings are not quite as sensitive these days as they were during the Israeli war, when Americans were spat upon in the streets of Cairo and U.S. diplomats were given the cold shoulder in all government ministries. But sooner or later in any conversation about Israel every Egyptian from the king on down will ask you testily why American policy is controlled by the Jews.

Father of his people?

THERE is less basis for Farouk's somewhat czarist notion of himself as the beloved father of his people than there is for his nationalism or Anglophobia. Most Egyptians, especially the fellahin, feel a kind of comfortable affection, born of familiarity, for whoever happens to be their ruler. But Farouk is apt to exaggerate their feelings for him. In 1943 he was seriously injured in a smashup with a truck and passed a month in the British military hospital at Kassassein, near Cairo. (The accident damaged an eye and impaired his sight—which explains why he seldom appears in public without dark-lensed glasses.) On his return from the hospital a vast throng lined the streets to welcome him home to the palace. Although the majority were undoubtedly motivated by simple curiosity Farouk was profoundly moved, and still speaks of this "demonstration of loyalty."

When this mood is upon him he has been known to walk into cabinet meetings and announce, "I represent the people." He will then propose elaborate programs of social reform while his ministers dutifully take notes and praise him for his vision and leadership. "In many cases," said a former cabinet minister, "the legislation suggested by the king had long ago been enacted into law."

Considering his actual and assumed powers, the king could best serve his country by acting as a kind of one-man Hoover Commission or all-powerful efficiency expert. For Egypt is plagued by a top-heavy and self-paralyzing bureaucracy. In the matter of foreign trade, for example, government officials often work at cross purposes. The Ministry of Commerce and Industry tries to encourage exports of rice and cotton, but exporters find themselves hampered by restrictions imposed by subsections of the same ministry whose main concern is keeping internal prices down. If goods intended for export do reach an Egyptian port accompanied by all the necessary documents, the stupidity of customs officials has to be reckoned with. Not long ago one exporter received an order from FAROUK'S LUNCH is a monumental feast. Uncovered items in this typical meal are (from front to rear) peaches, lobster, roast chicken, pomegranates and mangoes. the U.S. for several hundred bales of cotton waste. The bales were all torn apart and inspected at customs and then sent back to him for repacking. Again he shipped the bales. Again they were torn up. Finally the exporter canceled the order and sold his waste in Egypt.

By devoting a few hours a day to streamlining the operations of his government the king could make royal intervention a valuable administrative instrument. Unfortunately most of his waking hours are devoted primarily to self-gratification.

Farouk rises late, usually in Koubbeh palace, sometimes in Abdin. He begins his day with a hearty breakfast consisting of a minimum of five or six eggs, a bowl of porridge, a plate of beans and a pot of cocoa. Lately he has been dieting to lose weight. In an effort to reduce but maintain his strength he has been eating dozens of oysters, which are air-expressed to him from Copenhagen, 200 to 600 a week.

Before lunch Farouk usually has papers to sign, and he also glances through a digest of the press. Occasionally he will stop in and see his small daughters and their governess. Ferial, 11, and Fawzia, 10, live at Koubbeh palace. His youngest, 6-year-old Fadia, has been staying with her mother. Part of each afternoon is taken up with routine royal duties: cornerstones must be laid, monuments dedicated and schools inspected. Visitors who are granted audiences at the palace must also be entertained; they are shown his unique collection of antique clocks or his coin collection, valued at $4 million.

Mountains of dead birds

WHEN possible, Farouk passes an hour or two on his skeet range, where he keeps in practice for his weekend hunting parties. He is an excellent shot; on a recent shoot he bagged 344 ducks with 415 rounds. The front pages of Cairo newspapers are often adorned with a picture of the king standing behind a small mountain of dead birds.

He loves to drive and will often tear through the countryside at breakneck speed in one of his fleet of cars (Lincolns and Cadillacs are his favorites). When he drives through the streets of Cairo, preceded and surrounded by a covey of motorcycle cops, traffic is sometimes tied up for an hour.

Six or seven bodyguards are always within shooting distance of the king. These security precautions are understandable in view of the fact that two prime ministers (Mahmoud Fahmy El Nokrashy Pasha and Ahmed Maher Pasha), a high court judge and a Cairo police chief have been bumped off since the war. Except for Ahmed Maher, all of these were the victims of the Ikhwan El Muslimin, or Moslem Brotherhood, a half-million-strong fraternity of religious fanatics which was disbanded a year ago. Farouk has not been shot at since 1938 but he is taking no chances, at least in public.

At nightfall, if there are no official functions, the king drops into the exclusive Royal Automobile Club for a few hours' gambling. He occasionally dines there as well, and the kitchen always has an

IN NEXT WEEK'S ISSUE

Mr. President Eisenhower

EVER since Dwight D. Eisenhower became president of Columbia University his life and activities in the academic world have been known only to his colleagues. Next week, in an article written exclusively for LIFE by Quentin Reynolds, Americans can see Mr. President Eisenhower through the eyes of those who work with him. One of the most interested readers will probably be Dwight D. Eisenhower, who did not see the story in advance. When Reynolds offered to show him the manuscript before delivering it to LIFE's editors, the Eisenhower response was, "I never censored you men during the war and I won't start now."

Although his name still appears on front pages, it is as "General" Eisenhower, speaking as a military man on national defense or as a public figure speaking on public matters. For most Americans the name still evokes the smiling general who came home from European victory with the greatest prestige of any military leader in U.S. history. He is the man who won the hearts of America by the way he won a war . . . the man for whom the "Crusade in Europe" was a real crusade . . . a man who refused to be a candidate for the presidency of the U.S. Few people know him as "Mr. President" Eisenhower, head of one of the world's largest and most important universities.

There are not many cases on record that parallel President Eisenhower's switch from top military to top civilian administrative life. General Robert E. Lee became head of Washington College, but running Washington College in Lee's day was a simple matter compared to the job of administering a university that has some 3,000 faculty members teaching 30,000 students.

Next week LIFE's readers will find out how Dwight Eisenhower is applying to civilian life the qualities that made him a great general—his willingness to take risks and responsibility, his knack of picking men, his tact and understanding and force. They will read the story of a university president whose academic training was in the military tradition and did not include degrees usually required for a professorship, a man with no previous business experience who is running an institution with assets close to $200 million.

In an editorial in the issue of July 19, 1948, LIFE's editors said of the new Eisenhower job: "Since a good university president must be an amalgam of orator, public conscience, father-confessor, publicist, money-raiser, administrator and scholar, General Ike faces an even more challenging assignment than the Battle of Normandy. He deserves a hearty accolade for taking it on."

After reading "Mr. President Eisenhower" next week, LIFE's readers may feel that General Ike deserves another accolade for the way he has taken it on.

ample supply of spaghetti on hand for late royal snacks. The young Egyptian aristocrats who play poker or chemin de fer with the king say that he is a hard man to bet against. Farouk is the wealthiest person in Egypt (his private fortune is estimated at $50 million), and few of his gambling companions are able to match his $25,000 raises. Occasionally it does not even help to hold better cards. In a recent game one of his opponents held four jacks in a hand of draw poker. Betting soared. Finally Farouk called, laid down three kings and began raking in the pot. "I have four kings," he explained. "I am the fourth."

The king often winds up his day at the Scarabee, a semiprivate nightclub where the chief attraction is a lush, 20-year-old French singer named Annie Berrier. There, at 2 o'clock in the morning, anyone able to bribe the doorman with a pound note can stop in for a drink and observe Farouk at close range. He does not cut a prepossessing figure. Fat, balding and slow-moving, he sits for hours hunched over a table in the smoky gloom, surrounded by his courtiers and bodyguards, peering sleepily through his dark glasses at Annie as she leans back against the piano and huskily croons, "Je me sens bien... bien... bien, bien, bien" (I feel fine... fine... fine). From time to time a waiter will refill his glass with Coca-Cola (he never drinks liquor in public). A boisterous couple at an adjoining table will cause him to turn his head sullenly until the noise subsides. His eyes are hidden, his thick, sulky lips seldom smile and his fleshy body hardly moves.

Looking at Farouk, you cannot help wondering what he is thinking. Is he complacent or dissatisfied, restless or world-weary? Is he ambitious? There was a time when he toyed with the thought of becoming Caliph, which would have given him a position in the Moslem world somewhat comparable to that of the Roman Catholic Pope. He even grew the traditional beard. But his divorce and the pattern of his private life have dispelled this fantasy. Does he still dream of heading a federation of Arab states? If so, he keeps such dreams to himself. An Englishman who has known Farouk since adolescence has a simple answer for all these questions. "I think," he said, "that the king is just trying to find a way of enjoying life."

Many Egyptians feel that a stable marriage will prove to be the solution to Farouk's present instability. That Narriman Sadek is the best choice seems more than doubtful. The king needs a mature woman who will give him guidance and companionship as well as love. It would be too much to expect these qualifications of a 16-year-old schoolgirl who was already engaged to another man.

Meanwhile Farouk finds his pleasure where he can, and hunting is one of his more wholesome diversions. On a recent trip one of his guests was an American officer, and as the hunting party was warming up at the skeet range the American brought up the subject of the Shah of Iran's triumphal tour of the U.S. He wondered if the king had not thought of making a trip to America himself.

Farouk's face clouded. "Who wants to invite a king who is fat, bald and blind?" he snapped angrily. Then, turning away, he strode up to the range, seized a gun and began blasting away at the clay disks as they spun through the air, smashing them, one after another, as a spoiled child might trample his prettiest toys one at a time in a sudden fit of temper.

AS A KINGLY DUTY Farouk gave a state lunch in January for British Foreign Secretary Bevin, on his way home from a conference in Ceylon, and the Duke of Edinburgh, currently on naval duty in the Mediterranean. Although he is anti-British, Farouk recently accepted the honorary rank of general in the British army, and there has been talk of his making a state visit to England.

BODILESS ARMS (wall decorations of plaster) welcome the bewildered hero to the lavish halls of the soap company which sponsors the TV quiz program.

"CHAMPAGNE FOR CAESAR"

Story of an omniscient scholar gives movies a chance to aim raking fire at a sister art's quiz show

Other movie moguls may keep dignified silence when their customers stay home to wait for a phone call offering a chance at a quiz show prize. Not so independent producer Harry M. Popkin, who believes in carrying the war into the enemy's country. This he has done in a lively comedy called (for no good reason) Champagne for Caesar, which swings a number of wild satirical blows at the mentality of the radio and television industries in general. It deals with a soap company's quiz program which is produced by nincompoops, performed by hams and applauded by morons. An unemployed, soft-spoken scholar named Beauregard Bottomley (Ronald Colman) sees a feckless crowd gaping at the program on a television set, and angrily calls it "the forerunner of intellectual destruction in America." He promptly gets on it, answers question after question correctly, doubling the pot each time till it's up to $40 million. By the time he muffs a question, the humor of the original situation has run a little thin. So too has Popkin's crusade: for the movie's idea of a happy ending is to have the hero ally himself with the forces of intellectual destruction and start a radio program of his own.

ON QUIZ PROGRAM sponsored by soap company Beauregard Bottomley, dressed up as an encyclopaedia, begins well. When the glib interlocutor asks,

BEAUREGARD BOTTOMLEY ANSWERED

- 1) What is the first animal described in the Encyclopaedia Britannica? 2) Who composed the "Emperor" Concerto? 3) Who was the first Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court? 4) What is the eighth letter of the Greek alphabet? 5) How WINNER BOTTOMLEY, who now practically owns the soap company, is almost pushed headlong into a vat of soap by the firm's distraught president.

"Tell us the Japanese word for goodbye," Beauregard replies, "Sayonara . . . not to be confused with cyanide which, of course, is goodby in any language."

THESE QUESTIONS. COULD YOU?

many home runs were hit by Babe Ruth in 1927? 6) Which city is the farthest east, Las Vegas, Los Angeles or Reno? 7) How does Einstein regard the Space-Time Continuum? Beauregard Bottomley's answers can be found on page 122.

SICK BOTTOMLEY, in bed with a cold, is attended by nurse (Celeste Holm) soap company has sent to distract him from concentrating on quiz programs.

THE $40-MILLION QUESTION arouses so much interest that the program is held in the Hollywood Bowl. Bottomley gets a public offer to settle for $20 million, but he indignantly turns it down and waits for the final question.

HERE ARE BOTTOMLEY'S ANSWERS

- 1) Aardvark
- 2) Ludwig van Beethoven
- 3) John Jay
- 4) Theta
- 5) Sixty
- 6) Las Vegas
- 7) Professor Einstein imagines the continuum to be cylindrical as regards its extension in time, but spherical as regards its extension in space, so the cross sections at different instants always give a spherical universe of constant size, so of constant mass.

The quiz-master accepts all these answers except the last, which is the $20-million question. The sponsor goes wild with joy and disdainfully offers Bottomley six cakes of Milady soap as a consolation prize. But his joy turns to ashes when a long-distance call comes through from Princeton, N.J. It is Professor Einstein himself, to say the answer is perfectly correct.

BOTTOMLEY IS STUMPED by the final question, a completely nonintellectual one. Actually he agreed to miss it in return for a sizable settlement from the soap company and also to find out if his girl really loves him. She does.

"Jobs are easier- and safer in Steel"

says Bob Anderson, steel worker

Steel works for EVERYONE

Bob knows what he's talking about. For 17 years he has been a charging machine operator in an eastern steel plant.

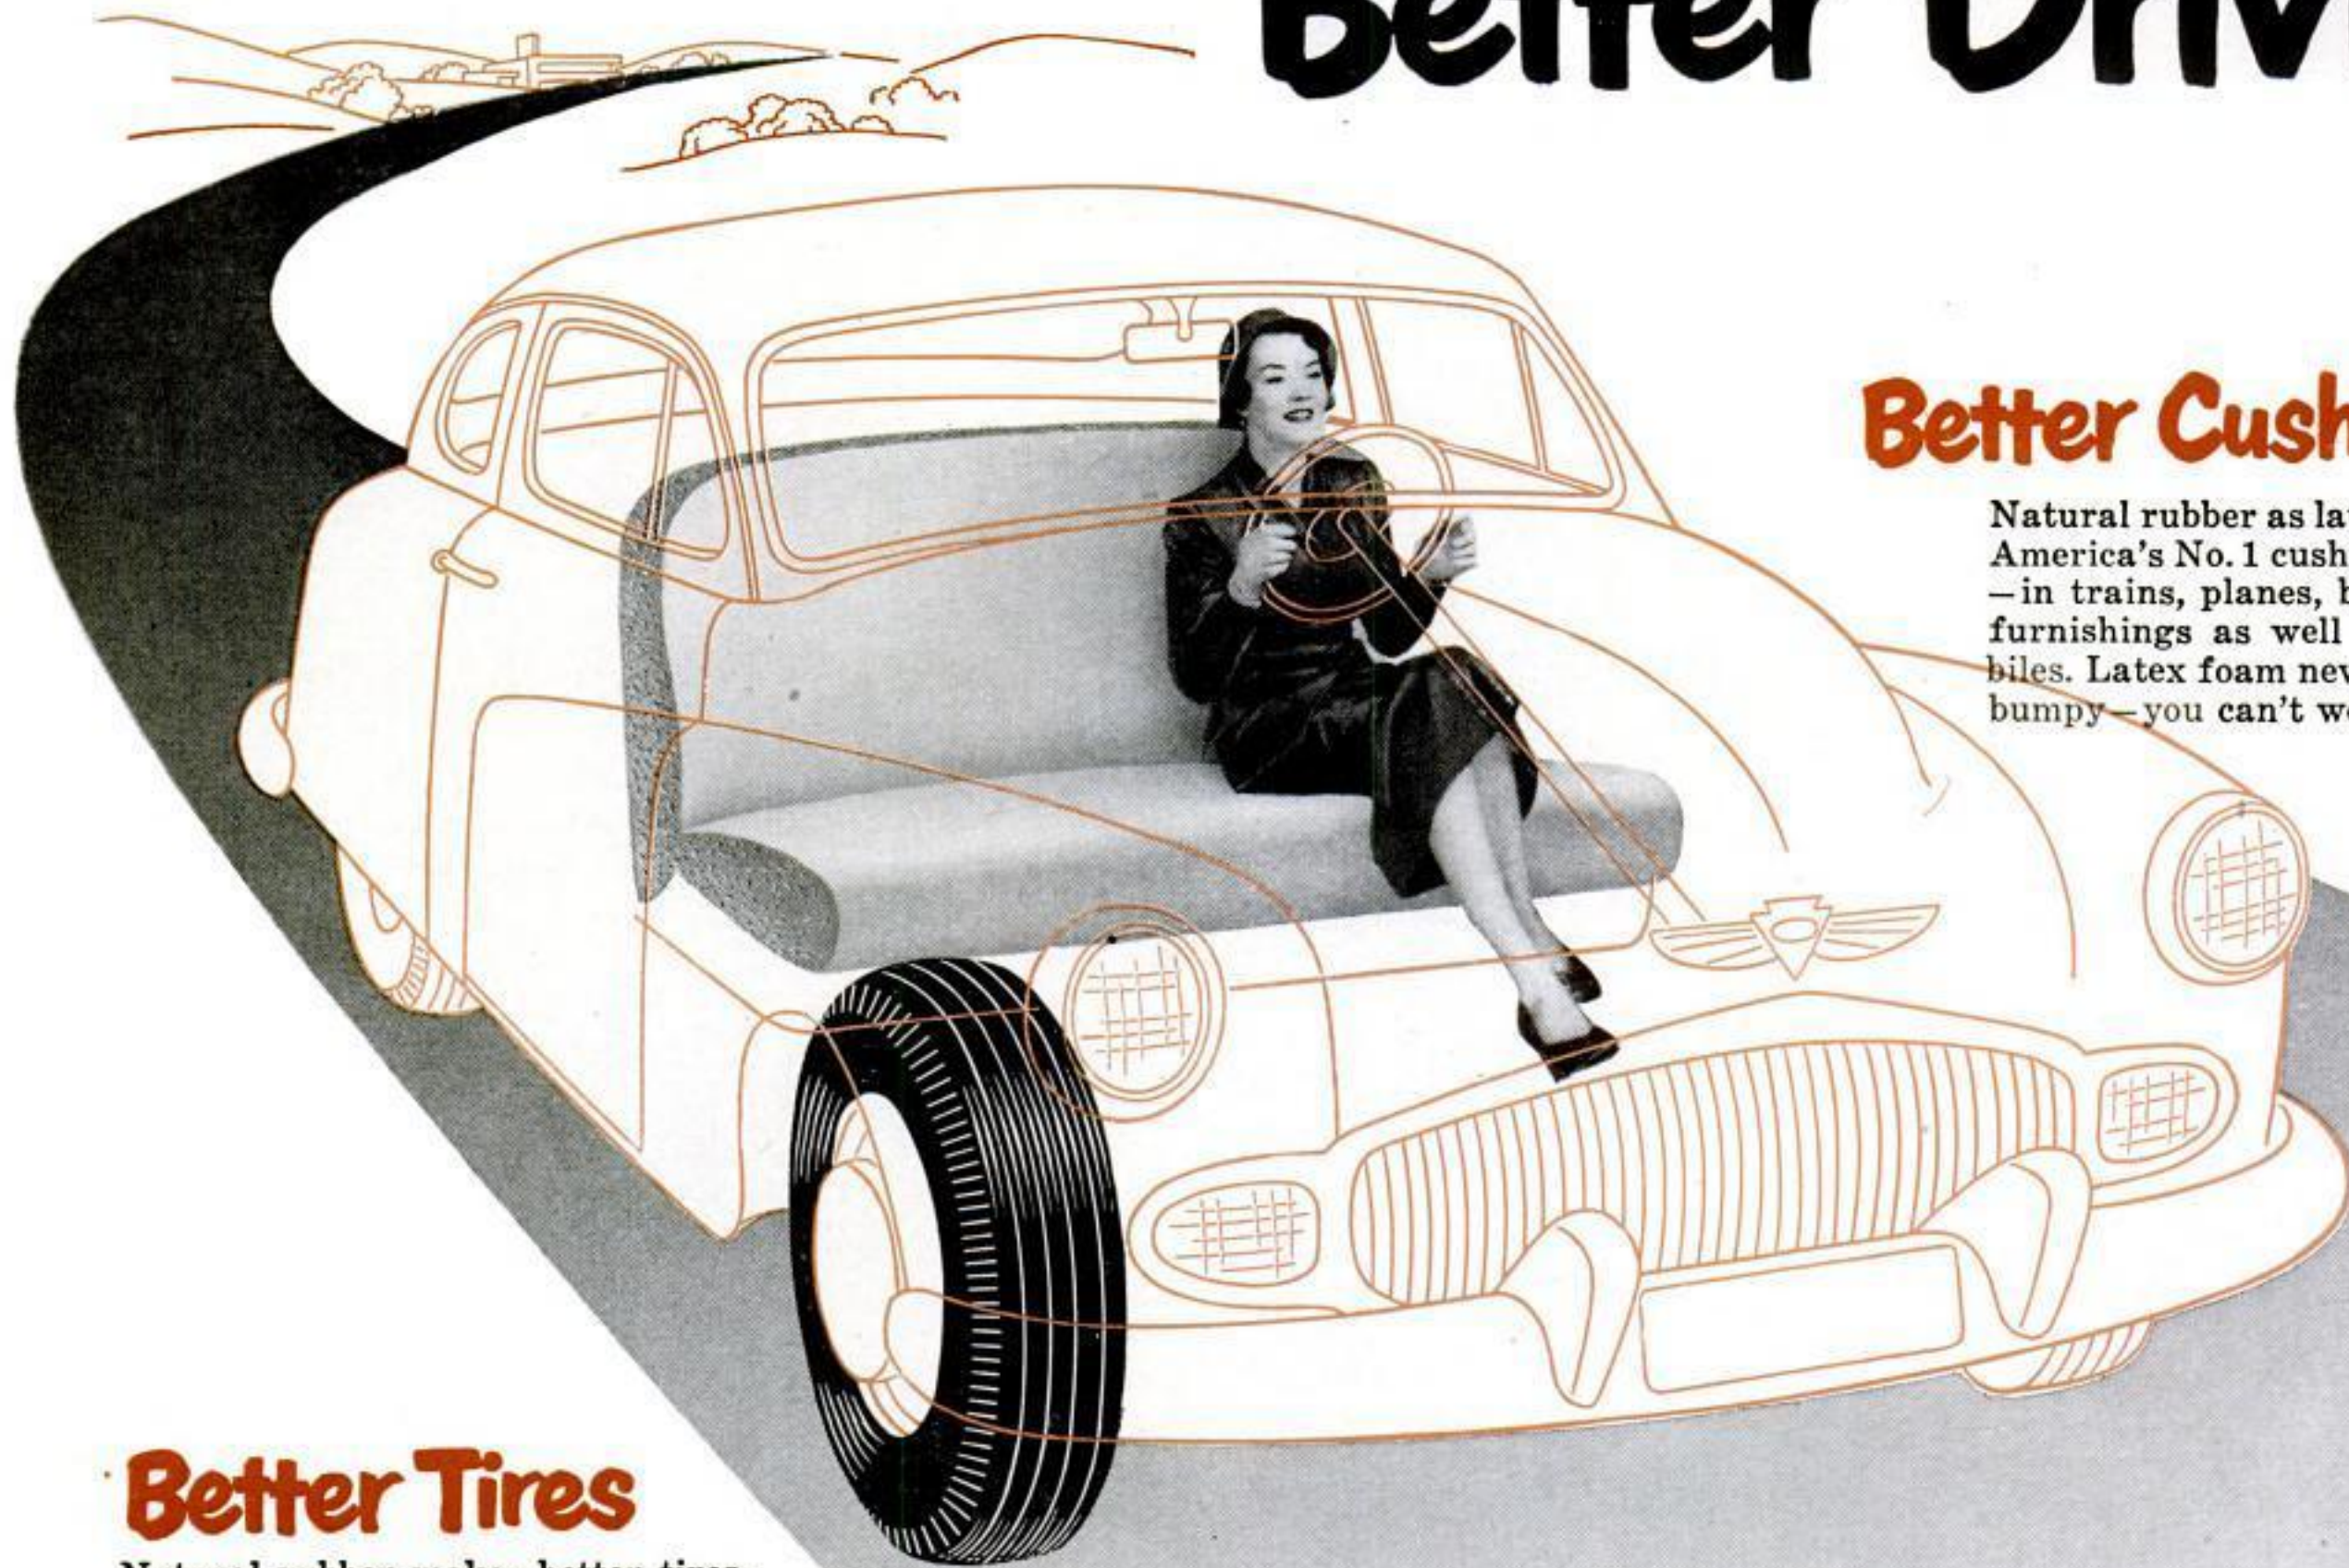

His job is to feed the limestone, scrap and ore into an open hearth furnace. Years ago, men shoveled in the materials by hand. Today Bob handles the whole job by finger tip, standing behind a big control panel.

Not only are jobs getting easier and safer in the steel industry, but wages have been steadily going up. Weekly earnings of steel workers, according to the latest figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, have increased 110 per cent since 1939.

It's a long-standing policy of the more than 200 steel companies to make jobs easier and safer, to pay good wages, to produce more and better steel at reasonable prices. And that is still the best formula for keeping America strong.

MORE Natural Rubber MEANS Better Driving

Better Cushioning

Natural rubber as latex foam is now America's No. 1 cushioning material—in trains, planes, buses and home furnishings as well as in automobiles. Latex foam never sags or gets bumpy—you can't wear it out!

Better Tires

Natural rubber makes better tires, because it is more elastic and flexible, skids less on snow and ice, and saves on gasoline consumption due to less road resistance.

Better Roads

Tests to date give promise that natural rubber, mixed with the asphalt top surface of roads, will make highways safer to drive on and will make them wear longer. It is the big news in highway construction today!

Natural Rubber

Nature and Science Serving Mankind

NATURAL RUBBER COMES FROM HERE

From Southeast Asia comes over 90% of all the natural rubber in the world. Over half of it is produced on small one-family rubber farms of a few acres. The other half comes from larger plantings called "estates".

You can drive with greater safety, comfort and economy . . . thanks to natural rubber.

The men who know . . . America's automotive engineers who select and test tires, prefer natural rubber.

These experts agree overwhelmingly that natural rubber tires skid less, ride more comfortably, and save gasoline every mile you drive because of less road resistance.*

Yes, more natural rubber means better tires.

More natural rubber also means more riding comfort inside your car with latex foam cushions.

And tomorrow . . . you'll be riding on better, safer roads with a top surface of asphalt mixed with natural rubber.

LIFE CYCLE of slime mold, shown in this drawing which serves as key to photographs that follow, lasts four days. Single-celled amoebae (far left) cluster together to form multicelled, crawling organism (center). Inexplicably it stops moving, sends up a spore mass which releases some of the amoebae (far right) that formed original mold.

THE LOWLY AMOEBA RISES

Remarkable photographs show how the simple, single-celled organism changes temporarily into a higher form of life

Far down the ladder of life, at the almost indefinable point where animals and plants seem to be the same, lives the single-celled amoeba, one of nature's smallest and most primitive organisms. In its microscopic universe the ordinary amoeba goes through its sexless life cycle alone, reproducing simply by splitting in half. But one species, scientists have found, has the peculiar ability to raise itself up one notch on the evolutionary ladder. These amoebae do this by banding together to form a totally new organism, a multicelled slime mold called Dictyostelium discoideum, which is a more complex form of life. Responding to a mysterious excitement, thousands of amoebae suddenly start streaming toward each other, forming into cellular chains. These pile up into a mound of protoplasm which moves off like a worm (below). Just as mysteriously it halts, then starts growing like a plant.

These remarkable photomicrographs by Dr. Roman Vishniac, never published before, show the life cycle of Dictyostelium discoideum. Organization of these amoebae into a higher form of life fascinates scientists studying how multicelled animals evolved from single cells. But the behavior of the amoebae leaves them puzzled, for when the slime mold is fully grown it simply breaks up once again into the individual amoebae which formed it.

MIGRATION BEGINS when spire of protoplasm formed by thousands of amoebae falls on side (top) and crawls away (bottom). Molds are magnified 50 times.

MIGRATION STOPS when slime mold gathers itself into shmoollike blob (top). Rudimentary spore mass puffs out, base starts to narrow and form support (bottom).

FINAL STAGE of mold's cycle starts as mass of spores moves up stalk. Mold may reach height of $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch, finally presents the strange sight shown on next page.

SWAYING SLIME MOLDS, their balloonlike spore balls fully ripe, arch over a bed of decaying leaves on which they grow. The molds thrive best in the damp, spongy floor of forests, but are also grown in special cultures by scientists who study their functions. These molds are magnified 150 times. Since his camera has a very limited depth of focus

Dr. Vishniac had to make 12 exposures for this photomicrograph, moving his camera lens a small distance each time to bring different sections into focus.

SPORE MASS, magnified 500 times, has ruptured (top, left) and life cycle of the slime mold is at an end. The first spores are just beginning to fall away. In the spore sack are approximately 80% of the amoebae that formed the mold.

FINAL COLLAPSE occurs when the mass falls to the ground and the spores spread out. Inside each individual spore is one of the original amoebae. The amoebae that formed the hardened stalk and the supporting base have died.

Harlem's Debutante Cotillion

52 girls make a formal bow to society

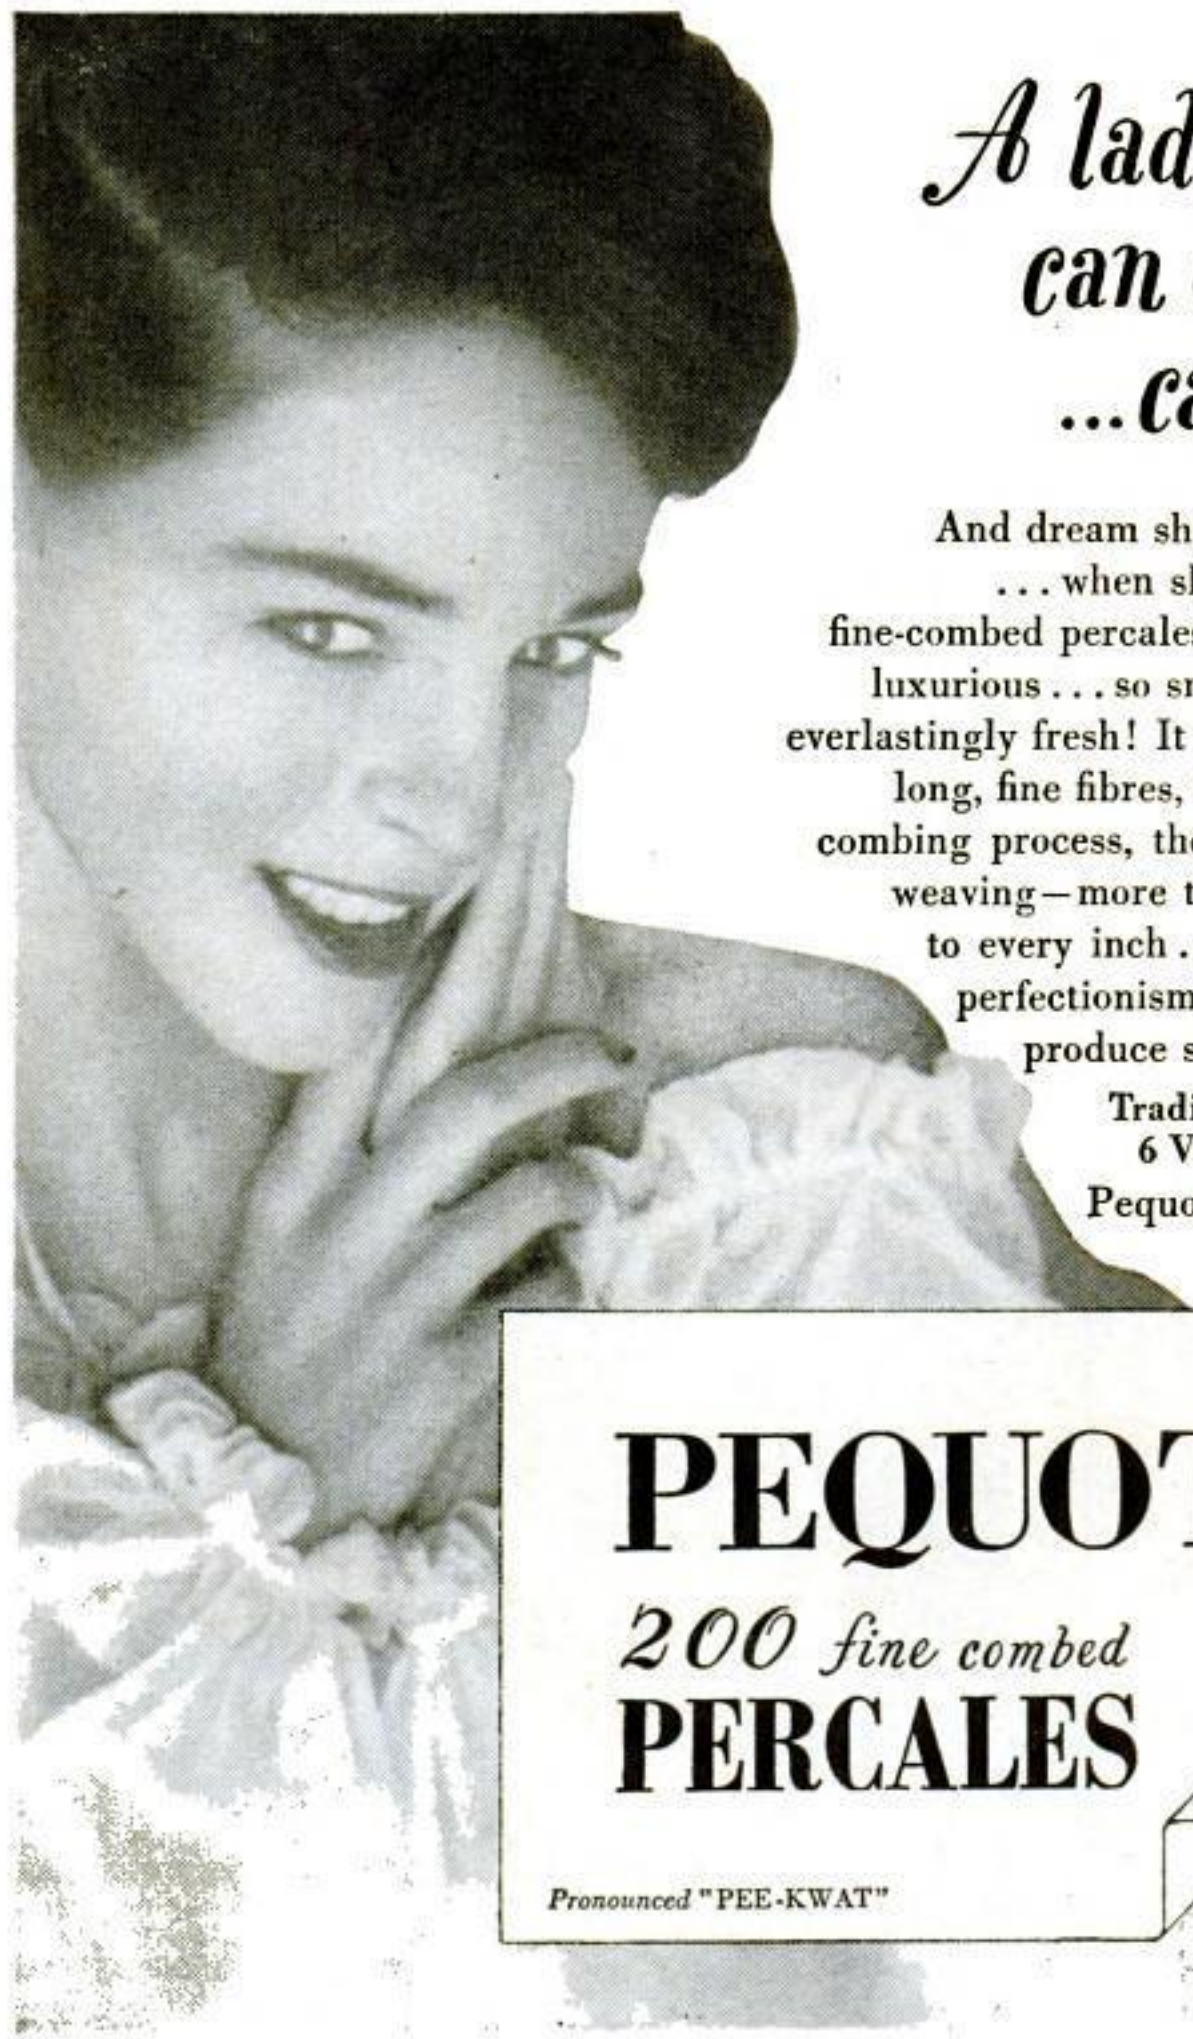

Other cities had tried it, but the largest Negro community in the U.S., centering in New York's Harlem, had never staged a debutante cotillion in which its daughters could make a bow to society all at once. Last month Harlem finally had one, mostly through the efforts of Mrs. Lillian Sharpe Hunter (right), one of Harlem's leading social-event promoters. Mrs. Hunter presided over the careful selection of 52 school girls, each one of a socially acceptable family and sponsored by one of New York's many Negro social and civic clubs. Escorts were all college men.

The cotillion, held at Harlem's Rockland Palace Ballroom before an audience of 4,700, began with a concert. Then the debutantes entered, were introduced over a loudspeaker and paraded down the hall with their ladies in waiting to join their escorts. After an elaborate cotillion waltz hundreds of balloons were released (opposite page), and then there was dancing until 3 a.m. Harlem's Amsterdam News described the affair as "an overwhelming success . . . unusual excitement and picturesque splendor."

GRAND MARCH is led by Mrs. Hunter and a guest of honor, Grover Whalen. Whalen, board chairman of Coty, Inc., gave each debutante a bottle of perfume.

← SHOWER OF BALLOONS, planned as climax, started too soon, pleased everyone. Debutantes are in center; escorts, ladies in waiting lined up behind.

BRATTON HILL HORSE in Wiltshire is 180 feet long, 107 feet high, its eye 25 feet around. It is thought to commemorate King Alfred's victory over Danes.

STALKING HORSE is one of several decorating Marlborough Downs near Swindon. Note this specimen's elongated face, angular leg joints, bobbed tail.

ENGLAND'S HORSEY HILLS

Postwar cleanup revives old British landmarks but their mysterious origins remain unsolved

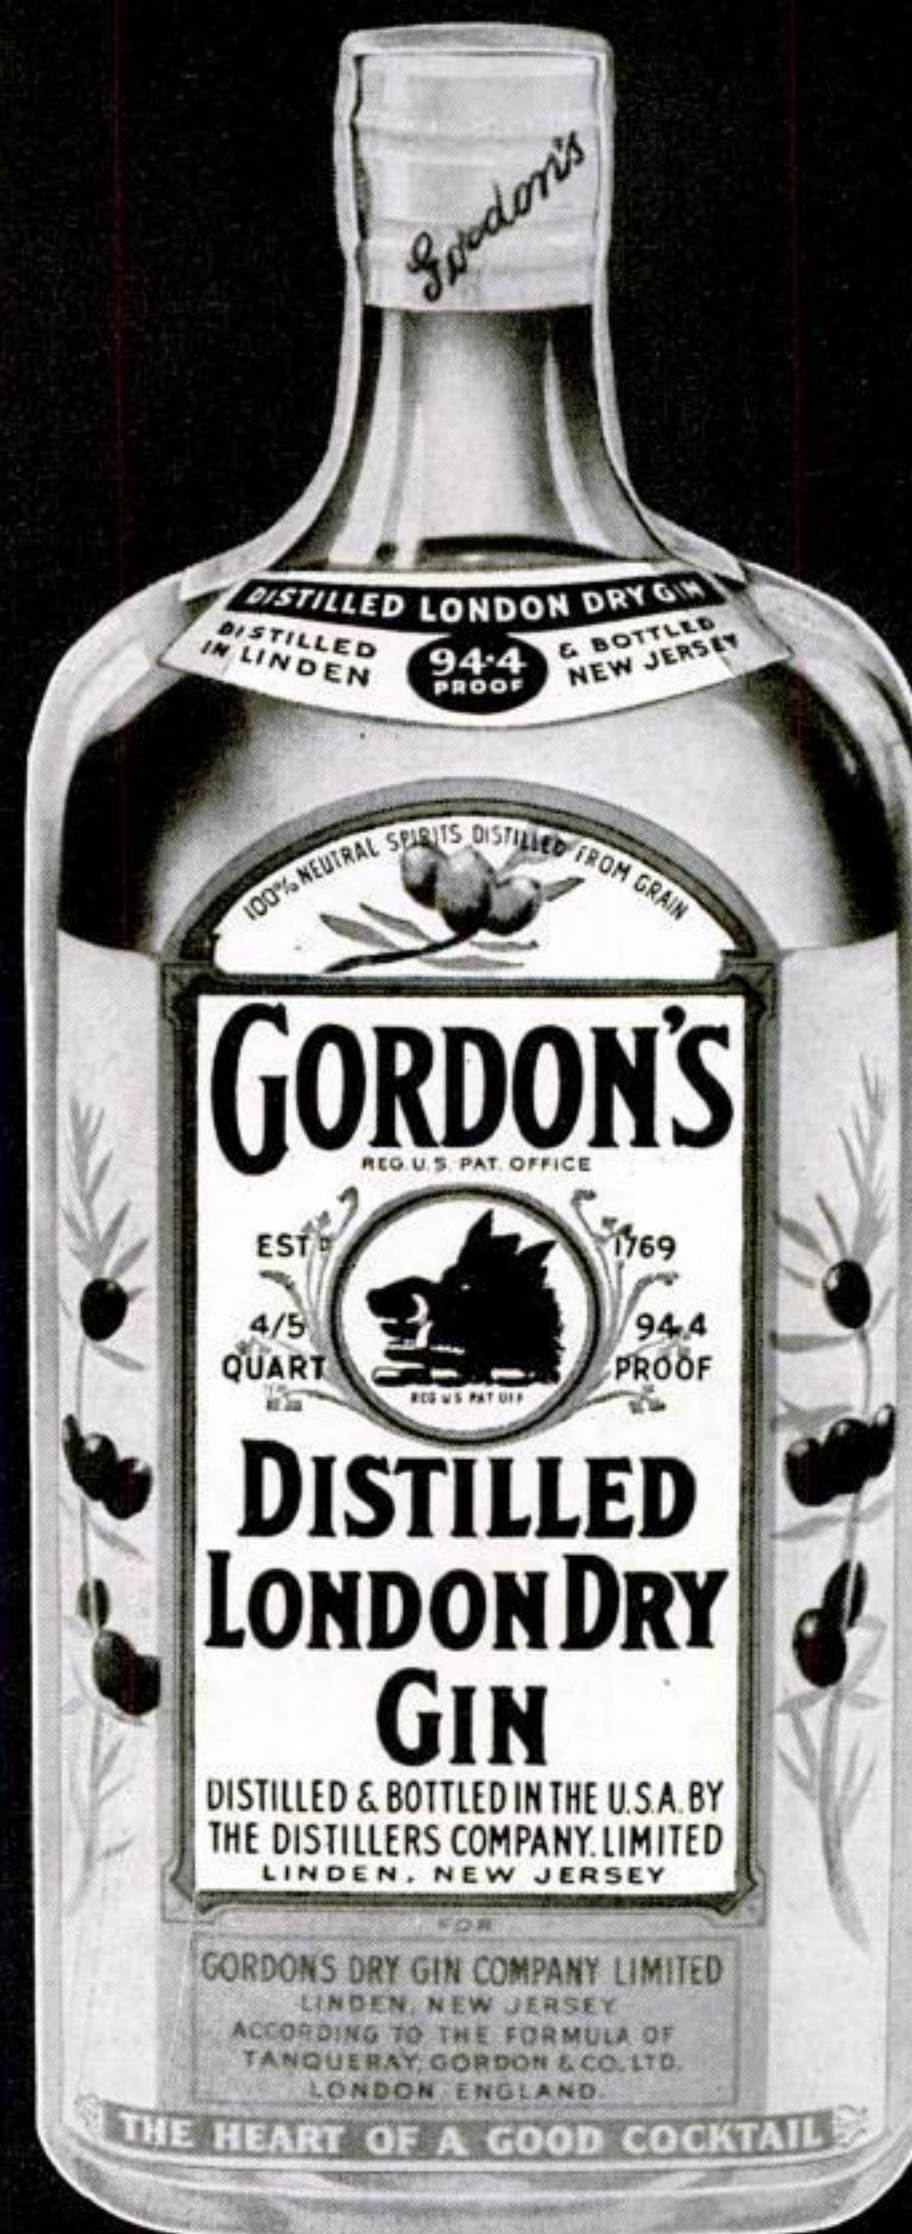

GALLOPING WHITE HORSE of Uffington is the most famous of all. It is 355 feet long, 130 feet high and reminds some viewers of a Picasso drawing.

WALKING HORSE is another of the chalky steeds of Marlborough Downs. English horsemen think that this particular one looks like an Arabian steed.

In southern England in early Christian times, settlers discovered fields of chalk underlying the hillsides. Soon many hills were marked with huge figures of horses carved in the chalk. Just why these strange works of art were created is still a mystery but archaeologists think they had a meaning connected with burial rites. Periodically through the centuries local workmen have renewed the horses' shapes and white coats by digging away accumulated turf. Now they are uniformly white from the latest freshening, the removal of turf camouflage put on during the war to prevent German bombers from using them as landmarks.

It's good business to do business with the Railroads

It's good business—because only railroads stand ready to haul anything movable, in any quantity, for anybody, to any part of the country, in any season of the year;

—because, for most movements and on the average, railroad charges are lower than those of other ways of transport;

—and because, the more freight you ship by rail and the more you ride the trains, the better able the railroads will be to keep down their costs and improve service to you.

That's true because part of every dollar the railroads take in is spent in a continuing program of replacement and improvement to make all railroad service more efficient and more economical.

In the last five years, the railroads have invested more than four billion dollars in improved facilities—money which not only has helped provide better and more economical service but also has helped other industries prosper.

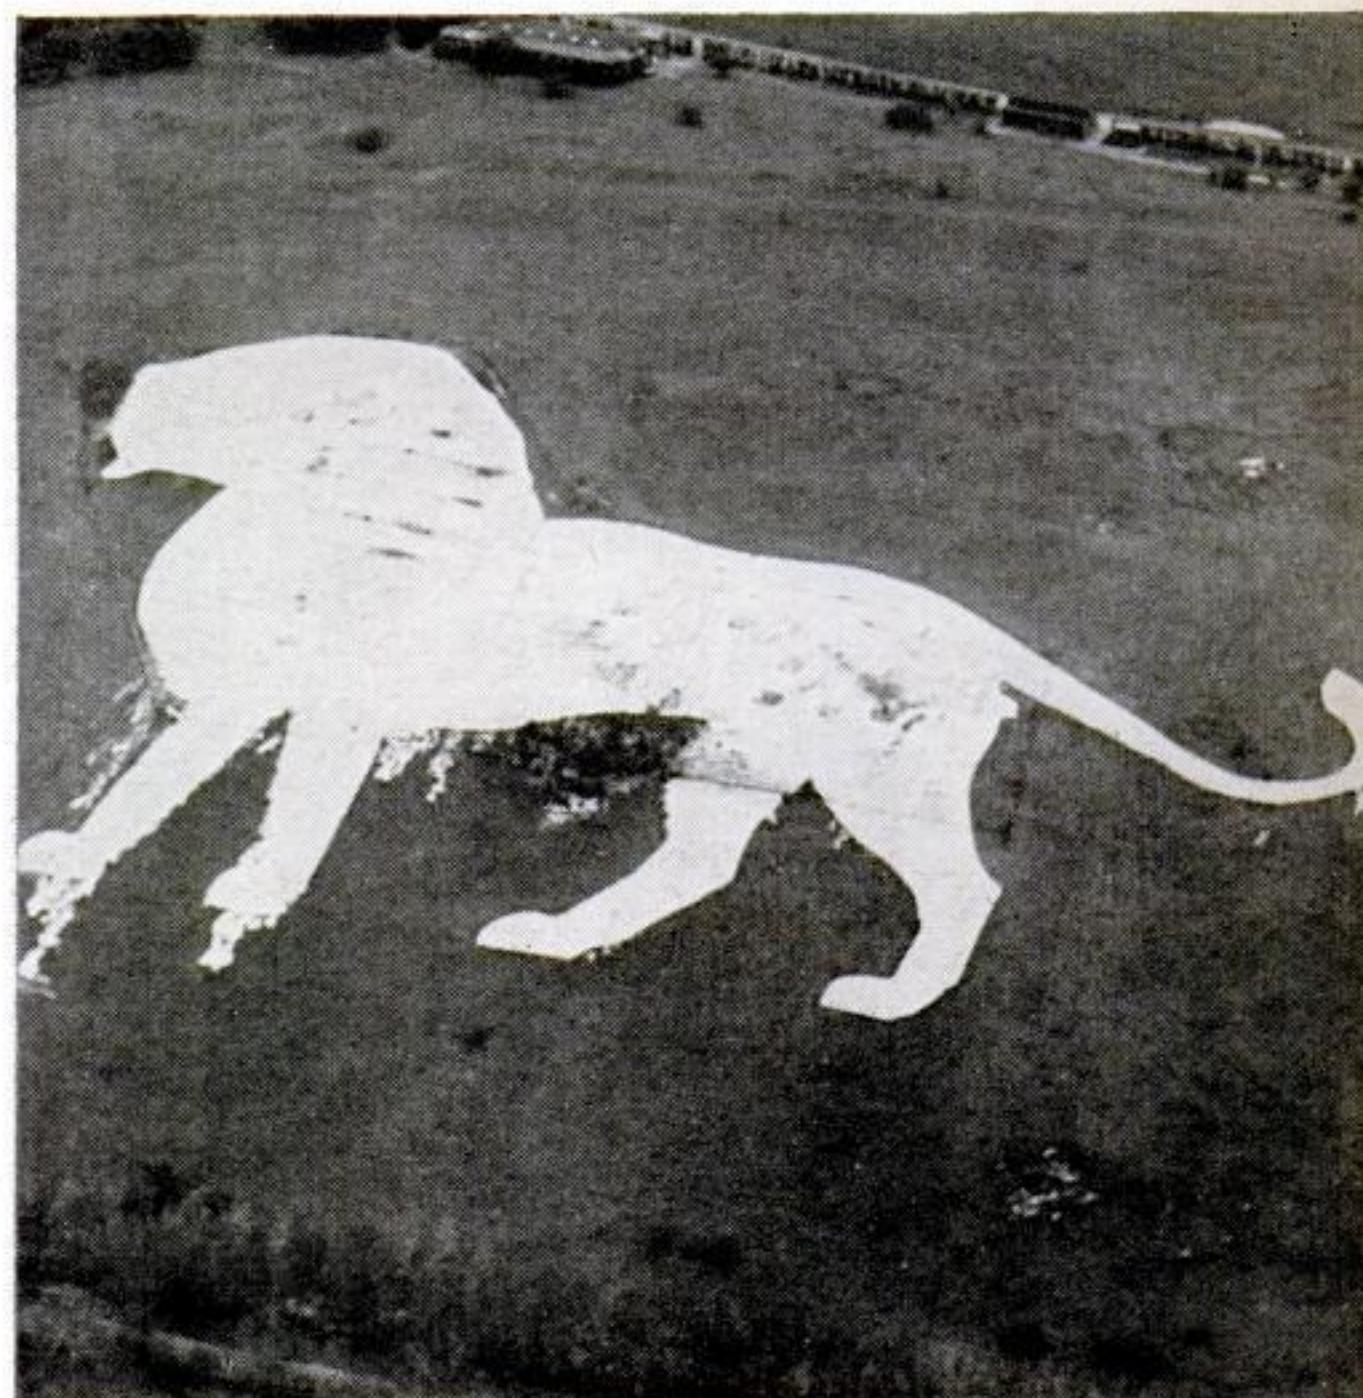

Every cent you pay for railroad transportation works three ways. It pays for safe, dependable service—helps insure better service in the future—provides business for industry, jobs for people in every part of the country.

So, when you do business with America's progressive railroads, it's really good business—for the railroads, for the country and for you.
